Terms Carter Callous of F.B.I. Director—ss on Abortion Seen

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—President Jimmy Carter today as both indecisive in making "contradictory" appraisals of Clarence M. Kelley, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and in announcing but carefully avoiding a conference on the White House. The President also suggested Kelley attempt to make an issue in the election contest.

Mr. Carter also campaigned in Pennsylvania mill towns and in Ohio. On the third day of his election campaign, he seemed to have established and to be following a pattern.

Carter Suggests That U.S. Foster Rights Overseas

Sees Foreign Policy as Lever to Aid Others

By CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—Jimmy Carter suggested today that United States foreign policy could be more effectively used as a lever to advance human rights in Communist nations and in repressive regimes that are friendly to America. But he proposed few specific steps to reach the goal.

The Democratic Presidential candidate told the National Convention of B'nai B'rith, meeting here, that President Ford and his advisers had "rationalized that there is little room for morality in foreign affairs and that we must put self-interest above principle."

Mr. Carter also campaigned in Pennsylvania mill towns and in Ohio. On the third day of his election campaign, he seemed to have established and to be following a pattern.

Ethnic Groups Emphasized

Since Monday, there has been one fairly formal speech a day dwelling primarily on a single subject of major importance, such as today's prepared address to B'nai B'rith, an organization that fights anti-Semitism and discrimination. There are one or more "neighborhood events," as they are described on the mimeographed daily schedules provided by the Carter staff.

The emphasis—at least during this initial foray into the industrial Northeast and Middle West—has been heavily on white ethnic groups, many of them predominantly Roman Catholic, with whom Mr. Carter is felt by some politicians to have some weaknesses.

This morning, Mr. Carter walked down a steep street on Polish Hill in Pittsburgh, with electronic eavesdropping by television news crews of his remarks on the importance of preserving ethnic neighborhoods. He put on a tee shirt, decorated with the Polish eagle and the words "Polish Hill," as he said farewell to a group of school children gathered on the steps of the Immaculate Heart of Mary school.

EX-LOBBYIST REGANTS ON 1970 GIFT TO DOLE

Apologizes to Senator for 'Error' on $2,000 Gulf Oil Donation

By NICHOLAS M. HORROCK
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—A former Gulf Oil Corporation lobbyist, Claude C. Wild Jr., said today that he was "confident" he had been "in error" when he said that in 1970 he gave $2,000 to Senator Robert J. Dole, now the Republican Vice-Presidential nominee.

Mr. Wild made a public apology to Mr. Dole, and the Kansas Senator accepted it.

Mr. Wild showed The New York Times today a stub for a $2,000 check drawn against the Gulf Oil Corporation's lawful "Good Government Fund" on Oct. 9, 1970. On the stub was the name "Klepp," the notation "not delivered" and under that the notation "given to Dole for disbursement by him." Mr. Wild said the notations were in his handwriting.

He explained, however, that since a series of press interviews Monday in which he said he gave Mr. Dole the money, he had come to believe that he had, in fact, placed the $2,000 in a safety deposit box. He said he did not now know why he wrote on the check stub in 1970 the phrase "given to Dole for disbursement by him."

Mr. Wild said his present memory was

U.S. Forms Drop Loyalty Queries

By PETER KIHSS

The United States Civil Service Commission has ordered elimination of all political loyalty questions on the standard application for Federal jobs, including whether a job seeker has belonged to the Communist Party or any group advocating forcible overthrow of the Government.

Instructions to delete the questions are going out to all 105 field examining offices. A spokesman in Washington said that the commission decided on the action last month because of Federal Court rulings that "the questions were so overbroad that they encroach on rights protected by the First Amendment," which guarantees free speech.

The Federal move was disclosed here by the American Civil Liberties Union, whose legal director, Melvin L. Wulf, and national staff counsel, Joel M. Gora, hailed "the long overdue abolition of these relics of McCarthyism."

The late Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, a Wisconsin Republican, waged campaigns to oust Communists from Government jobs.

The commission said that its questions on the job forms derived from an Executive order by President Eisenhower on April 27, 1953. The order required that

West Point's Cadets Swear p Students and Athletes Cheat

By PRANAY GUPTA
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—Sworn state-3 cadets accused of cheating on standardized States Military Academy Point assert that nearly 100 colleagues, including high-achievers and captains of athletic teams, are practicing academic dishonesty in such practices as cheating on academic courses, lying to even "fixing" student honor roll not-guilty verdicts.

These affidavits were delivered to members of Congress and a House and were made available to a committee in the House on Oct. 1. The affidavits were made available to the House on Oct. 1. The affidavits were made available to the House on Oct. 1.

The affidavits that were made available make charges not just against cadets of this year's graduating class, but also against those in classes dating to 1974. Among the alleged violators was Frederick Borman, a 1974 West Point graduate, who was accused by two cadets of having received $1,200 from them in order to cheat and of other dishonest practices among students, and create an impression that violations of West Point's Honor Code were far more common than has been previously disclosed.

Soviet Foreign-Policy Gains Offset by Series of Setbacks

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, Sept. 8—Although the United States has been portrayed by some candidates in the American election campaign as losing ground to the Soviet Union, Moscow has been experiencing as many setbacks as successes in trying to advance its foreign-policy goals.

In recent months, the Kremlin has found itself balancing rising fortunes in Africa and Southeast Asia against failures in the Middle East, unabating cold war with China and stalled accommodation with the United States.

Soviet effectiveness abroad has also been sapped by weaknesses at home, notably in agriculture, and constrained by the suspicious conservatism of an aging leadership.

Soviet Steering Cautious Course
Consequently, according to Western, third-world and Communist diplomats, the Soviet Union seems likely to keep steering a cautious course in its foreign relations, though with potshots at targets of opportunity.

"I would not foresee any drastic initiatives being taken from here," a senior European diplomat suggested. "Soviet foreign policy is at its best not very resourceful."

This is so partly because Moscow still hews to the time-tested doctrine of "peaceful coexistence," which allows it to press the West on a governmental level for arms reduction and increased trade while backing somewhat more covertly what it identifies as progressive or national-liberation movements throughout the world.

VORSTER SAID TO BACK U.S.-BRITISH PROPOSAL ON RHODESIA ACCORD

GUARANTEES FOR THE WHITES

South African Plans to Meet Smith Next Week—Ford Urges a 'Major Effort' for Transfer of Power

By BERNARD WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, Sept. 8—Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa has agreed to a United States-British plan to provide financial guarantees of perhaps $1.5 billion to $2 billion for whites living in Rhodesia, according to diplomatic sources.

The United States-British financial plan is designed, essentially, to assure members of the white minority that they will have defined rights in an independent Rhodesia, as well as the choice of another country to emigrate to, and financial compensation if they choose to leave.

Although the figure of $1.5 billion to $2 billion is being mentioned, diplomatic sources said that the price tag on the package might be higher, or lower, depending on how many Rhodesian whites took advantage of it and on the final terms of the plan, the outline of which had already been made public.

Work on Formula Continuing

Details of the formula are still being worked out and diplomats here see a distinct possibility that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger will shuttle between South Africa and countries of black Africa in an attempt to work out a financial compromise acceptable to the Africans and to Mr. Vorster, serving in behalf of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia.

Mr. Vorster will meet early next week with Mr. Smith in Pretoria, the South African capital. It will be the first meeting between the two men since South Africa publicly committed itself to support moves toward majority rule in Rhodesia. [Page 3.]

In Washington, President Ford said that the United States must make "a major effort" to bring about a diplomatic solution that would allow blacks to take over power peacefully from white minority regimes in South-West Africa and Rhodesia. [Page 3.]

Disagreement Over Smith's Role

Mr. Vorster has expressed disagreement with Secretary Kissinger over the role to be played by Mr. Smith in any transfer of Rhodesia to black African rule. Diplomatic sources said that Mr. Vorster, at his meeting in Zurich last weekend with Mr. Kissinger, insisted that Mr. Smith could play a role in the transfer process, and indicated that the Rhodesian Prime Minister would eventually accept majority rule.

Mr. Kissinger and British officials have said privately that Mr. Smith's refusal to bow to international pressures for majority rule seemed to rule out any possibility that the white Rhodesian leader would accept a black government. It is Mr. Vorster's view, according to diplomats, that Mr. Smith is Rhodesia's only credible white leader, and that he will come to terms under the pressure of the United States, Britain and South Africa. According to diplomatic sources, the

Laos Bans Birth Control to Build Population After a Decade of War

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN
Special to The New York Times

VIENTIANE, Laos — The Laotian Government has banned birth control.

The decision to outlaw the use of contraceptives throughout Laos, perhaps the first nation to be subjected to such an action, is designed, according to government officials, to build up the nation's population, decimated by more than a decade of war and more than a year of flight of a sizable part of the population into exile in Thailand and beyond.

As a result, contraceptive devices and pills have disappeared from shelves throughout the capital and in the few instances where some old supplies still linger, they are treated as virtual contraband.

Birth control has never been widespread in the countryside outside the cities, but among many women who had begun to use devices or pills, there has been concern about an unchecked growth of families that they were finding more difficult to feed.

Extensive Empty Land Is Noted

In a recent interview, the Information Minister, Sisana Sisana, observed that "there is so much empty land in Laos" that a larger population was needed to develop it.

He cited figures that showed a birth rate of 4.2 percent and a death rate of 2.4 percent yielding a comparatively low annual growth rate of 1.8 percent, which the Government would like to see increased to at least 2 percent and perhaps higher.

Mr. Sisana acknowledged the difficulties that an unchecked birth rate could pose for Laos in terms of coping with the need for more food and other services for a younger population, but he said that "the Government is not worried about birth control at present."

"Certainly it is a heavy task for the Government, big families," he said. "But the Government is trying to find ways and means to put children to school and feed children at the expense of the state."

Long a Goal of U.S. Aid Effort

A large part of the Government's eagerness to do away with the family planning program may also be traced to the fact that family planning was a major project under the United States Agency for International Development, which for more than a year has been a target of Laotian propaganda.

The American program began in 1969 in conjunction with the International Planned Parenthood Federation and by 1972 nearly 70 medical aides were working in the family planning area with 5,000 families enlisted in the program. The Mahosot Hospital's child-care and maternity wing, built under the program, is still in use although all family planning programs have been cut off.

Of course, some exceptions still remain, particularly for high government officials who are most able to arrange exceptions, and in some cases where health is threatened by pregnancy. The Information Minister himself, with eight children in his family, conceded that he had started using contraceptives.

"Eight children was no problem at the time we were living in the liberated zone," Mr. Sisana observed, referring to the Pacht Lao-controlled countryside during the civil war. "But now that we are in Vientiane, it has become a problem. There are so many things here to spend money on."

Some Exceptions Being Made

Doctors at Mahosot Hospital, Vientiane's principal civilian hospital, said some vasectomies and tubal ligations were still being performed when the health of a woman was in jeopardy. It was clear that such a decision was being made with a degree of flexibility.

Nevertheless, for most Laotian women, the lack of availability of pills or birth control devices, coupled with the fear of even appearing to contravene any government decree, has made birth control, particularly in the capital, virtually unobtainable.

One official, whose wife has had three children in the last three years, has become so desperate as to take the extraordinary step of approaching foreigners and asking help to obtain birth control pills.

South Africa Gets Pro-Regime Paper

Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Sept. 8 — Interests close to the South African Government launched an English-language newspaper here yesterday, posing a strong threat to the usually anti-Government Rand Daily Mail.

The new morning newspaper, The Citizen, which is backed by Louis Luyt, a prosperous businessman, is making a major effort to differentiate itself from its rival. In an article by its editor, Martin Spring, it pledged not to follow the example of newspapers that "have too often been ammunition factories for our enemies."

Aim Called Choice for Readers

Many opponents of the Government and its policy of separate development of the races believe that Mr. Luyt started his venture with the intention of driving The Mail out of existence. With a circulation of 135,000, it has been in the forefront of the crusade against apartheid and has been a target of verbal and legal assaults by the Government for years.

Mr. Luyt, who is known to have close ties to number of powerful figures in the Government, has strongly denied this. He has said that his purpose is to offer English-speaking South Africans a choice in their daily reading and to make money at it if he can.

Last year Mr. Luyt failed in a widely publicized attempt to buy South African Associated Newspapers, which publishes The Rand Daily Mail as well as The Sunday Times and The Sunday Express. The Citizen maintained that the effort had failed "on emotional rather than financial grounds," an allusion to strong opposition among liberal readers.

AFRICAN RIOTS IN ANOTHER TOWN

Stoned and Fire Started in Cape Town—2 Bodies Found at Burned Hostel in Soweto

CAPE TOWN, Sept. 8 (AP) Racial rioting today in Kimberley, the diamond-mining town between Johannesburg and Cape Town, Blacks stoned buses and an open-air housing ring on fire. The police said there was a riot, but they made several arrests with staves to disperse the rioters. Two charred bodies were found in the ruins of a hostel for Zulu workers set aside by other blacks in one of the black townships in Cape Town. A new round of fighting between hostile black tribal groups of 1,000 Zulu men, all without homes in the barracks-like hostels, are housed when they come from their homelands to work in mining as contract laborers.

Underlining the problems the Government confronts, a report by an economic research bureau at the University of Stellenbosch predicted that unemployment would grow rapidly among blacks if the current recession deepened. It said that there were no official statistics on black unemployment but that it appeared to be slightly above 8 percent, as against 5.5 percent in 1973.

Ford Says U.S. Must Seek an Agreement in Africa

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—President Ford said today that the United States must now make "a major effort" to bring about a diplomatic solution that would allow blacks to take over power peacefully from white minority governments in South West Africa and Rhodesia.

He said the recent talks that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has held with Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa and European leaders had made "good progress" on those southern Africa issues.

Mr. Ford spoke at a news conference that he called after having received a briefing on the talks from Mr. Kissinger, whose activities regarding southern Africa have drawn domestic political criticism.

The White House has until today said little about African policy, suggesting to some State Department officials that it was trying to avoid any direct involvement in the possibly controversial diplomatic efforts. But today Mr. Ford became involved.

He began the news conference by reading a statement on African policy. Drafted with Mr. Kissinger's collaboration, it was meant to give the Secretary important political backing before his expected trip to southern Africa and the start of a possible "shuttle" between black African nations and South Africa to accelerate negotiations.

"The process that is now beginning is an extremely important one," Mr. Ford said. "It is extremely complicated. There is no guarantee of success. But I believe the United States must now make a major effort because it is the right thing to do. It is in our national interest and it is in the interest of world peace."

Officials here pointed out that the American initiatives in Africa have met with little popular support in this country. Most of the mail received at the State Department was said to be running heavily against the initiatives because of their support for black majority rule. American officials said that Mr. Kissinger, if he goes to Africa, will give priority to getting an international conference started on the South-West Africa issue. The territory, also known as Namibia, is controlled by South Africa. The United Nations has pressed for Namibian independence. A constitutional commission set up by South Africa has set Dec. 31, 1978, as the date for independence, but the majority of United Nations members have rejected the commission's moves because nothing was said about elections and the Namibian nationalist group recognized by African nations, the South-West African People's Organization, has not been involved.

Mr. Kissinger reportedly made progress in his talks with Mr. Vorster in overcoming the South African's previous refusal to participate in any meeting with the South-West African People's Organization.

On Rhodesia, the inability of the black Africans so far to come up with a united voice, as well as the intractability of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia, has led the Americans to conclude that progress will be slower and more difficult.

Progress is being made, however, on an incentive plan that could involve, according to Americans, hundreds of millions of dollars to help ease the economic burden of whites in Rhodesia in a transition to black rule.

He said that the United States had three objectives: "First, to prevent an escalation of the violence which in time could threaten our national security; second, to realize popular aspirations while guaranteeing minority rights and insuring economic progress; third, to resist the intervention in the African situation by outside forces."

The final decision on whether Mr. Kissinger goes to Africa next week depends on a report expected tomorrow from William E. Schaefele Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, who is now in Dar es Salaam to learn the views of black African leaders who just met there.

As an example of the problems faced by the Administration's African policy, Senator Dick Clark, chairman of the Foreign Relations subcommittee on Africa, opened hearings on South Africa today by expressing support for Mr. Kissinger's efforts but criticizing him for, he said, not giving priority to bringing about change in South Africa.

ter Says He Will Meet With Rhodesian Premier Next Week

JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

PRETORIA, Sept. 8—Prime Minister John Vorster, speaking tonight at the ruling National Party, would meet early next week with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger in Pretoria, the South African capital, will be the first between the two since South Africa publicly announced its support for the white-minority government in Rhodesia.

Mr. Vorster's visit follows his weekend meeting in Zaire with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, which Rhodesia and another territory, South-West Africa, in topics. But he vowed to make efforts to bring about a decision to majority rule in discussions were fruitful and will be said. "I will give all my attention to your future and the future of the children, depends on it," he said. The Policy Reaffirmed. Mr. Vorster said that his principal objective was to cooperate with Mr. Kissinger in a policy of anti-Communism, which he said would be the main force behind the anti-Communist movements operating in southern African territories. "I will continue to cooperate with you because you are anti-Communist," he declared. Mr. Vorster won a standing ovation from more than 10,000 people in Bloemfontein when he said he would never agree to a sharing of power with whites in

"There will be no sharing of power," the Prime Minister said, reaffirming the Government's policy of offering blacks political rights in their tribal homelands in place of emancipation in the country as a whole. The Prime Minister also asserted that the Government would move against "certain whites" whom he did not name, unless they stopped inciting black protests. "It does not matter what your status is or who you are," he said.

Visit by Kissinger Is Expected. The timing of Mr. Vorster's meeting with Mr. Kissinger next week suggested that it might have been planned to coincide with a visit to South Africa by Mr. Kissinger. Officials here have hinted that Mr. Kissinger might meet with Mr. Smith in Pretoria if the Secretary of State travels to southern Africa next week as expected.

Mr. Vorster's participation in the United States peace initiative occupied only a short passage in a two-hour speech that focused on events at home. It was the Prime Minister's first major address since the outbreak of anti-Government protests in black townships across the country nearly three months ago. More than 300 people, all but a handful of them black, have died in the upheaval. A crowd of 7,000 in the gymnasium of the University of the Orange Free State, and several thousand more listening to loudspeakers outside, interrupted the Prime Minister with sustained applause several times as he vowed not to negotiate away the white man's hold on power. "This is my answer to those who want political representation for blacks in a white parliament," he said. "I will grant political rights to everyone in this country, but the black man's political rights, now and in the future, are in his own area and his own parliament."

Mr. Vorster, who became Prime Minister 10 years ago this week, has pursued a policy of offering the country's 18 million blacks political rights in nine so-called homelands, relatively backward areas carved out of the traditional tribal domains. One of the homelands, the Transkei, is scheduled to become an independent nation on Oct. 26.

Mr. Vorster said that the "agitation" in black areas was part of a coordinated plan to scuttle the Transkei's independence, which has been strongly opposed by black militants. He asserted that the black organizations behind the disorders had originally been created by whites.

His warning to whites who "sweep up" the disorders—an Afrikaans term for incitement—was bound to be taken as a threat to move against prominent opponents of the Government who have blamed apartheid, not agitation, for the upheaval. One of the best-known critics, Helen Suzman, a Member of Parliament, told a student audience in Johannesburg today that the "black-power" groups blamed by the Government for the unrest were "a joint growth product spawned by exclusive white refusals to make changes."

For the first time, the Prime Minister outlined the subjects he is prepared to discuss with black representatives, including the homeland leaders, whom he is to see on Oct. 8. These include home ownership in the black townships, restrictions on movement between the homelands and urban areas, regulations limiting black business, the powers of local governments in the townships, and education, including job training.

These issues have been high in the list of grievances presented to other Government ministers at meetings since the unrest broke out. The restrictions on migration, in particular, are a sore point among blacks, many of whom are allowed in the urban areas on a temporary basis only, without their families.

Mr. Vorster said he was willing to discuss a relaxation of the restrictions, but that he was hoping to hear from the black leaders how they proposed to solve the problems that would arise if the 12 million rural blacks were allowed to migrate to the cities at will. He said he was also prepared to discuss an easing of restrictions that limit most blacks to unskilled jobs, another strongly resented aspect of the system, but stressed that this would have to be done "without reducing the labor pattern to chaos."

The Prime Minister coupled his threat to whites who side with the blacks with the sternest warning yet to black demonstrators. He said that the Government, having shown its readiness to discuss black grievances, would not hesitate to order the police to take stiffer measures against the demonstrators unless the disorders stopped immediately.

Mr. Vorster also assured his audience, representing the bedrock of Afrikaner support for the National party, that Afrikaners had no need to apologize for the racial policies of the Government. "We are expected to feel sorry," he said. "Sorry for what?"

Arab Oil Nations and West Join In Aid Effort for Egypt's Economy

Special to The New York Times

CAIRO, Sept. 8—The major Western nations that have assisted the Egyptian economy are reportedly joining with Arab countries in a consultative group to discuss and coordinate these aid programs. The group, according to Western economic sources, will try to put pressure on Cairo to adopt economic changes that it has balked at accepting.

Zakel Shafel, the Minister of Economy, confirmed in an interview today that the consultative group, to be composed of about 15 nations and agencies, would have its first meeting in Paris in December.

He said the group would consist of the United States, France, West Germany and other countries including Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates, and the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Economic Changes Put Off

Mr. Shafel announced in May, after negotiations with the Monetary Fund that Egypt had accepted a package of changes, including moves to float the highly protected Egyptian pound and to let it seek its own level in international-currency dealings, as well as steps for severe reductions in more than $1 billion in governmental subsidies annually.

The changes, hailed by the Monetary Fund and other Western economic agencies, were to have begun at the end of May. But Mr. Shafel twice announced postponements and now Western sources say they have been put off indefinitely as "politically impossible."

As a result, Egypt will not get, at least for the time being, a loan of up to $250 million from the International Monetary Fund and major American banks to back up the Egyptian pound and to ease the country's dangerous balance-of-trade deficit.

According to Western sources, the various oil-producing Arab countries that have been helping Egypt stave off bankruptcy have also made their own major new commitments to the Egyptian economy conditional on Cairo's acceptance of the International Monetary Fund package.

Outlook for $2 Billion Deficit

The Arab countries formed a special fund for Egypt last month, capitalizing it with $2 billion. However, President Anwar el-Sadat has said repeatedly that this is not enough, that Egypt must have $12 billion from its Arab friends over the next five years, plus immediate help to meet this year's deficit.

Vorster Is Reported to Approve U.S.-British Proposal on Rhodesia

crucial question now, in the aftermath of the Zurich meeting, is whether black African nations will accept the Western plan that assures financial aid and property guarantees to Rhodesia's white minority.

Without the support of Tanzania, Zambia and Mozambique—and to a lesser degree, Angola and Botswana—the United States-British financial initiative would be, in the words of one diplomat, "meaningless and irrelevant."

One diplomatic source explained that there were two phases to the United States-British plan. "The first stage is lining up the non-Rhodesian parties—the major outside actors—to agree to the script," he said. "This is, essentially, the focus of all the current diplomatic activity."

These outside parties include South Africa, the black African nations neighboring Rhodesia, and the consortium of nations that would contribute to the fund—the United States, Britain, West Germany, France, and possibly Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

Following agreement on the first phase of the scenario, the sources say, Mr. Kissinger and the British are agreed that South Africa would apply pressure on Mr. Smith to accept the final package.

At the same time, according to diplomatic sources, the black African nations involved in the settlement would put together a government from the black leaders in Rhodesia.

One difficulty of achieving any Rhodesian settlement is the failure of a coherent black leadership to emerge in the nation of six million blacks and 270,000 whites.

Joshua Nkomo, the 69-year-old leader of the Zimbabwe (Rhodesian) African People's Union, reportedly has the support of President Kenneth D. Kaunda of Zambia and President Julius K. Nyerere of Tanzania. His rivals include the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, 56, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, and several emerging radical figures who say they represent Rhodesian guerrilla forces.

According to the current, and tentative, version of the financial plan, the United States and Britain are seeking to establish a floor price for the sale of farmland, safeguards for pensions and financial assistance to whites seeking to emigrate.

One item under discussion concerns a percentage of assets to be provided to white Rhodesians who choose to leave the country, and higher payments to those who remain. Thus whites who decide to leave the country might receive 10 percent of the value of their assets initially. Those who remain for two years would receive a higher percentage, and whites who remain five years or longer would receive an amount equivalent to a sizable proportion of their assets, if not the full value.

KEOIG'S PROPOSAL ARABS DISPUTED

Controversy Is Aroused by Official's for Measures to Curb Presence in Galilee Area

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times

ALEM, Sept. 8—The publication of a confidential report written by an official suggesting ways to curb the number and influence of Arabs in the Galilee region has a sharp controversy here.

The report, written by Israel Koenig, secretary of Interior's chief office in the Galilee region, said that by 1978 the Arab population in the area would outnumber the Jewish population. Such a situation, according to the report, raised the question whether the area might be threatened.

The report went on to recommend that measures be taken against the growth of the Arab population through steps that include a rapid increase of Jewish settlements in areas with heavy Arab populations, a decrease in state subsidies to Arab families, and a program encouraging Arab young people to study and then work abroad.

The report was said to have been written last year after an Israeli Arab, a Communist, won election to the Knesset, the Israeli parliament, in Nazareth. It was said to have been circulated six months ago, at a time that Arabs rioted in the area.

At that time, six Israeli soldiers were killed and scores were injured in a general protest among the Arab population since Israel was founded in 1948.

The report's "dangerous nature" stressed in a statement published yesterday in Hamishmar, the newspaper of the Mizrahi Party, to call attention to the nature of the report's findings. The authorities had accepted the proposals, the result would be a serious deterioration in the relations between Israel's Arabs and the Jewish population, Al Hamishmar said.

The newspaper called for the removal of Koenig from his post because "an official possessing an outlook as damaging as Koenig's should not be in a position so sensitive an area as the Galilee." The publication of the report brought into focus one of the most urgent social questions—the status of the Arab, who have often been considered second-class citizens. Its disclosure led to a spate of editorials in Hamishmar presenting the full political implications.

Chronot, an independent publication, said that Mr. Koenig's report painted a demographic threat in the Galilee that should not be lightly dismissed. It said his proposals "do not fit Israel's democratic regime and image."

In 1974, Israeli Arabs constituted 47 percent of the 520,000 population in the northern Galilee district. According to the Koenig report, the figure would rise to 51 percent in two years.

The organ of the National Front, a left-wing party, praised the report, saying it had taken "pains to warn of the dangers lurking in part of the country where the Jewish majority is not a majority within two years."

The report also mentioned that the organ of the National Front, a left-wing party, praised the report, saying it had taken "pains to warn of the dangers lurking in part of the country where the Jewish majority is not a majority within two years."

Stronger U.S. Law on Arab Boycott Backed at New York Senate Hearing

By GEORGE GOODMAN JR.

An amendment to a Federal export law that would add teeth to prohibitions against compliance with the Arab boycott was supported in New York City yesterday by witnesses appearing before a State Senate subcommittee hearing on human rights.

The amendment was sponsored by Representative Benjamin S. Rosenthal, Democrat of Queens, and was approved by the House International Relations Committee on Aug. 1. It is scheduled for consideration today before the House Rules Committee.

If the bill is passed, injured parties could file under the bill's civil or criminal provisions for collection of triple damages against any American concern or individual complying with the boycott.

Appearing at the World Trade Center for yesterday's hearing, Joseph Robison, general counsel of the American Jewish Congress, sharply assailed the State Human Rights Division for failing to conduct investigations into complaints of anti-boycott violations.

"There are no rules or regulations, the clear test of how serious the agency is about law enforcement," said Mr. Robison, "and it has been a full eight months since the passage of the Lisa Law." The law, signed by Governor Carey on Jan. 1, makes aiding the Arab boycott a misdemeanor.

Racial Bias Is Charged

Charges of racial discrimination were brought recently against a shipping concern by the American Jewish Congress, which said that two Jewish persons qualified for engineering jobs were not hired because of fears by the employer that he would lose Arab business. In both cases the parties were awarded substantial damages, Mr. Robison said, but only because of his agency's diligence.

In a similar charge, Assemblyman Joseph F. Lisa, chairman of the hearing, said banks were ignoring the Lisa Law, "in effect, enforcing the boycott."

Mr. Lisa cited four New York banks in violation that he said continued to violate the Lisa Law. The banks he named were Citibank, Chemical Bankers Trust and Chase Manhattan.

Spokesmen for the banks have previously explained that the banks do not honor the anti-boycott effort because, they argue, the dispute between the Arabs and the Israelis is fundamentally economic and not racial or religious, as the Lisa Law says.

Yesterday, William Haddad, director of the Assembly Office on Legislative Oversight and Analysis, cited findings in his report charging that anti-boycott measures had not resulted in any bad effect on the New York area economy.

Heavy Losses Feared

"We estimate that 100 or less real jobs were lost, mostly in the packing and freight forwarding area, due to the law," he said. At hearings in February, when exporters cited Aramco Oil's relocation to Virginia, observers warned that the move would signal a massive loss of other business.

The move by Aramco, which is now principally owned by Saudi Arabia, was begun before the boycott, Mr. Robison said. Other losses that were feared never occurred, he added. Out of a total of 14,554,278 long tons shipped in and out of New York ports in 1975, only 326,878.9 long tons involved Arab business, Mr. Robison said.

Assemblyman Lisa said his subcommittee had requested hard testimony from those who cited economic losses resulting from the Arab boycott but "none have come forth because there seems to be no data to support the claims."

A Federal law outlawing compliance with the boycott would result in the end to the process of blacklisting businessmen with "Jewish connections," Mr. Lisa said. The list, he said, contains "1,500 names of persons, some of whom appeared on lists compiled in Nazi Germany."

CEAUSESCU AND TITO DIFFER AT RETREAT

Rumanian Leader Comes Yugoslav Apprehension as Shift Toward Soviet

COLUM W. BROWNE
Special to The New York Times
Yugoslavia, Sept. 8—
Nicolae Ceausescu of Rumania
Yugoslavia today for four days with President Tito at a mountain retreat. The meetings are for the coordinating planning for next meeting of the European Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and also to discuss a new Rumanian hydroelectric plant agreement in trade. Such meetings are frequent between such countries as Yugoslavia and Rumania.
Soviet officials have shown concern over recent developments in the first week of August, President Ceausescu took a working vacation at the vacation

the Soviet Communist Party leader I. Brezhnev. For the last it has been customary for party all the Warsaw Pact nations one time every summer in the of Mr. Brezhnev. time Mr. Ceausescu was also visit for the first time, to Republic of Moldavia, which own country.
has long contended that the word means nothing more or less than Rumanian, although in the Soviet language is written in Cyrillic Roman letters.

Rumanian Issues Cause Worry

in last year, high Rumanian officials privately expressed fear border problems of Bukovina, and Moldavia were being resolved. The Soviet Union might change designs on present territory.

Ceausescu's visit to the Soviet part was therefore seen as significant. Rumanian officials have been far more consistent in a joint statement from Mr. and Mrs. Ceausescu describing "principle" of relations be-

Argentina Orders Jail Sentences For Those Causing Labor Unrest

By JUAN de ONIS
Special to The New York Times

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 8—Argentina's military Government responded to strikes in the automotive industry today with a decree punishing instigators of work stoppages with up to 10 years in prison.

The strikes have halted work by 20,000 employees at the assembly plants here of Ford, General Motors, Chrysler, Mercedes-Benz and Fiat in the most serious labor protest against wage restrictions since the military took power in March, ousting President Isabel Martínez de Perón.

Gen. Horacio Tomás Liendo, the Minister of Labor, visited the struck General Motors plant in a suburb of this capital today and met for two hours with worker representatives and company executives.

General Liendo said that the talk had been highly positive on the part of the worker delegates, although he noted that work stoppages were not allowed under present decrees.

Cautionary Word on Inflation

"Workers' salaries are not as much as they should be, but we must be very careful in avoiding any changes that would lose the ground we have gained in the last few months against inflation," General Liendo told reporters at the factory entrance.

At the Chrysler truck and automobile plants here, factory delegates representing 4,500 workers told management that the stoppages were in protest against the 12 percent wage increase granted by the Government last week. According to the workers, who had one of Argentina's most militant unions before the military suspended union activity, the increase does not restore the purchasing power lost to inflation through price increases since the last pay raise was granted in June.

An automotive company executive said there was an economic basis to the protest, but it was being manipulated politically against the military. One colonel called the work stoppages revolutionary gymnastics.

The first protests against the limited wage increase began last week, with slowdowns at several plants. By yesterday the work stoppages were complete at some plants.

The Minister of Economy, José Alfredo Martínez de Hoz, has established tight guidelines on wages. Any company granting an increase of more than 12 percent would be subject to a loss of credit at official banks and tax penalties.

This policy is part of an overall strategy to reduce inflation, which was raising prices 30 percent a month when Mrs. Perón's Government was replaced in March. Since then price increases have been reduced to 5 percent a month. But the wage restrictions have reduced the real purchasing power of paychecks by at least 30 percent since December.

Jehovah Witnesses Curbed

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 8 (UPI)—The Government tonight barred members of the Jehovah's Witnesses from practicing their religion in Argentina.

The order, signed by President Jorge Rafael Videla, also prohibits Jehovah's Witnesses from publishing literature and holding meetings.

A number of members of the sect were arrested last month in the province of Misiones, 885 miles northeast of Buenos Aires, for instructing their children not to sing the national anthem or recite the pledge of allegiance to the flag in school.

Jehovah's Witnesses, who refuse to honor national symbols, have been persecuted in other countries, notably some in black Africa.

ACCOUNTANT WHO DISAPPEARED WITH $6 MILLION IN COMPANY FUNDS SAID ON RETURN FROM GREECE

By JAMES F. CLARITY
Special to The New York Times

Paris, Sept. 8—With a newly sprouted beard and wearing blue jeans, the once middle-aged chief accountant who disappeared two months ago with $1.6 million belonging to the giant Dassault aircraft company returned to France without the cash.

Soldier of Fortune Sought
As he was manacled, questioned in La Santé Prison in Paris, the accountant did little to cast the mystery his disappearance had.

The case involves his contacts with a fortune still being sought by the disposition of the money he took from a Paris bank July 6. The money was packed in 300 francs worth slightly more than $100. The question why Mr. Vathaire, 47, left was about $73,000 a year, to undertake the caper that has troubled France and raised uneasy questions about the Dassault company.

As Any Lockheed Parallels
The French expression "pots de vin" (pots of wine) for bribery, Mr. Dassault said there was no possibility that he would sell its warplanes around the world. Dassault Mirages have been sold to about 20 countries—the company had acted like the Lockheed Corporation, the American company involved in bribery scandals in the Netherlands.

Mr. Dassault clinched his argument that he was honest, Mr. Dassault, resigned last year to win the order for fighter planes for the European nations, the business was sold to the General Dynamics of the United States. "The Dassault house does not have a policy of bribes is that if it did not have lost the contract," he said.

Mr. Dassault said also that any irregularities in his company's activities would be uncovered by now by French inspectors who examine its books. He said French inspectors were as efficient as their American counterparts in such matters.

Personality Alleged
Mr. Dassault sought clearly to give the impression that the entire affair sprang from personality changes of Mr. Dassault. He had worked for Dassault since 1948. Last April Mr. Dassault said he found his ailing wife, Chantal, in the bathtub of their Paris apartment. "The death of his wife gave me a shock," said Mr. Dassault. He had frequented nightclubs and sought

Mr. Dassault, an industrialist said he had no idea where the missing money was, but he had been advised by a police inspector that Mr. Vathaire no longer had the money. He had never heard of Jean Vathaire, a former mercenary who was convicted in Paris for a 1968 plane hijacking five years ago. Mr. Kay is known to have been acquainted with Mr. Vathaire, and French police are looking for him.

SEPARATISTS IN CORSICA SAY THEY BLEW UP PLANE

Corsica, Sept. 8 (AP)—An official who said he spoke for the National Liberation Front said that the front was responsible for blowing up a French Boeing 707 aircraft at Corsica's airport last night. The front also is responsible for several explosions across the island last night of striking trucks and the movement to break the island's ties with France.

It was said earlier they were holding truckers and separatist on suspicion of having blown up the plane. More than 50 other truckers were released this morning. The truckers denied responsibility for the explosion, which destroyed a plane jetliner. The incident occurred after truckers closed the airport to demand the release of the head of a separatist group, Jacques Fieschi, who was held for six months in prison last year leading a protest against increases on freight to mainland.

U.S. Eases the Dispute Over Sale of Nuclear Technology

Sept. 8 (Reuters)—France and the United States have smoothed over a dispute involving French nuclear sales, and agreed to completely resolve the matter, easing their relations, French officials said today. The atmosphere followed talks yesterday between Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing. The two men discussed the general question of nuclear sales to their two countries, but did not discuss any particular sale.

tion outlined by Mr. Brezhnev and President Ford at their Vladivostok meeting in late 1974.

The Russians seem resigned to riding out the American campaign furor in hopes of reaching an arms agreement afterward. They show no signs of wanting either to scrap détente or to sweeten it with concessions. An American diplomat noted, "We're both marking time with nothing really discarded."

Europe

Last year's European security conference in Helsinki gave the Russians what they wanted in the way of recognition of the continent's power borders and a divided Germany. But the Helsinki agreement also left the West with more valid grounds on which to question Moscow's minimal performance on human rights.

Consequently, one of the Soviet Union's prime concerns is to put its best foot forward next year at the Belgrade conference that will review progress since Helsinki. This is not expected to produce much toward liberalizing Soviet society.

But there is diplomatic speculation that the Soviet bloc may try to compensate with modest concessions at the stalled Vienna talks on mutually reducing forces in Central Europe in an effort to deflect Western criticism in other areas.

Moscow seems less certain about how to accommodate the new independence of West European Communists, which it had to acknowledge at the East Berlin meeting of European Communists in June. Though the French and Italian Communists seem to diverge little from the Kremlin on most foreign policy questions, they do offer an attractive democratic alternative to Eastern Europe. One West European diplomat said that Moscow "would like to see the Western Communist parties influential, up to 49.9 percent, but not inside the government."

Middle East

The Soviet Union has suffered its most visible setback in the Middle East. Its estrangement from Egypt, once the linchpin of Soviet policy in the area, has been followed by deteriorating relations with Syria as a result of the Syrian military intervention in Lebanon. At least one Arab diplomat does not rule out a blow-up between Moscow and Damascus.

Even Iraq, once a staunch ally, has edged closer to Iran, leaving a radical Libya as Moscow's best friend in the Middle East. The Soviet Union is also unhappy about Iran's emergence in the region as a non-Communist counterforce, but-pressed by American arms sales.

The Russians are concerned about the survival of the Palestinians as well as about the risk of wider war. But their difficulty, as one Western analyst saw it, is that events in the Middle East have outdistanced Moscow's proposals, nearly all variations on an anti-Israeli theme.

"The Russians are still unwilling to take positive political risks," he said. "They have shown they don't have the answer and are not even being relatively close to a solution."

Africa

By contrast, Moscow's prestige has risen in Africa following the victory of its client, the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, over two rival movements in the former Portuguese colony. The Soviet Union has not only earned a foothold in southern Africa but also promoted its influence among other nations like Mozambique and Tanzania that were once pro-Chinese.

But success has also locked the Kremlin into backing other liberation movements like the South-West African People's Organization, whose leader, Sam Nujoma, was welcomed to Moscow last month. In view of the Soviet pledge of consistent support, few diplomats doubt that more arms will be finding their way to guerrillas in southern Africa.

At the same time, the Soviet Union is seizing an opportunity to discredit the United States in southern Africa by linking it as much as possible to the all-white Governments of South Africa and Rhodesia. This line was stressed in the Soviet press when Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger met last weekend with Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa.

Soviet foreign policy here remains heavily tied to Cuba. The Soviet Union still seems traumatized by the 1973 military overthrow of the Marxist regime of Salvador Allende Gossens in Chile, possibly because the coup contradicted the Kremlin's ideological contention that détente favored the world revolutionary process.

An American diplomat said of the Russians that "they have been relatively inept in dealing with Latin America in the past, though they do have an arms supply capacity." It was reported recently that the Soviet Union had agreed to sell military aircraft to Peru.

Asia

Moscow's most serious problem in Asia remains its hostility with Peking, still visible in the unresolved border dispute. Since 1968, the number of Soviet divisions in the frontier region has increased to 43, from 15, according to one Western military attaché. Yet the Russians are clearly looking for a chance to improve relations once Mao Tse-tung dies. Such a watershed event could alter Moscow's relations with Washington as well as with Peking.

While pressing the West for arms reduction and increased trade, the Soviet Union has supported what it identifies as national liberation movements. In Angola, it supplied weapons such as these armored personnel carriers and tanks.

Moscow has also tried to woo Tokyo to encourage an infusion of Japanese technology to help develop Siberia. But close cooperation seems unlikely without some concession on the southernmost Kurile Islands, which the Japanese contend have been improperly occupied by the Soviet Union since the end of World War II.

Prospects look better for the Soviet Union in Southeast Asia. The American pullout from Indochina has led Moscow to establish diplomatic ties with nations like the Philippines. The Russians have become active in Laos. But their interest seems to lie with Vietnam as a potential counter to Chinese influence in Asia.

Soviet foreign policy is unlikely to change as Moscow gears up for its customary autumnal flurry of diplomatic activity, including peace proposals at the United Nations. For all its frustrations, Moscow has not slackened its commitment to relax tensions with the West. "I think that Brezhnev is seriously interested in continuing détente," said an East European diplomat, who pointed out that the Soviet leader had pushed the concept even in a tough speech at the conference of European Communist parties.

Rhodesia Says Black Guerrillas Killed a Bedridden White Woman

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Sept. 8 (AP)—The Government said today that black nationalist guerrillas striking from neighboring Botswana killed a bedridden white woman yesterday near Plumtree.

Lorna May McFadden, a 66-year-old widow, was at her home in the town about six miles from the southwestern border with Botswana, a communique said, adding: "It has been established that he group of terrorists responsible for this brutal attack on a defenseless woman came from and are heading back to Botswana." Most guerrilla attacks have originated in Mozambique or Zambia.

MASS SUICIDE IS REPORTED BY BUDDHISTS IN VIETNAM

PARIS, Sept. 8 (AP)—Twelve Buddhist monks and nuns burned themselves to death in a village in the Mekong last November to protest persecution by the Communist regime, the Buddhist Church of Vietnam said.

The church's official delegate, France, published a photostatic of a note written by Thich Hieu Hiep, of the Duc Su Monastery, two monks and nine nuns to explain mass immolation. The note contains appeal to the Communist author "respect the right to freedom of all religions."

The church said that three weeks before the suicides, the Venerable Thich president of the United Buddhist wrote to Saigon authorities to that Communist officials "at the roots level" had seized the remnants of the monks and nuns and cloistered them in Phu Hiep District, Thua Thien Province.

Mr. Thu's letter to the now Executive Council of South Vietnam the 12 decided to burn themselves after receiving orders from officials to stop displaying Buddhist praying for war victims or of "religious silence."

The letter said Abbot Hien had ordered to "expose the great and historic victory of the way to his nuns and monks, and said been instructed to participate in political activities of revolutionary organizations.

The Vietnamese Embassy here comment.

Ford Proclaims Forest Wealth

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (UPI)—President Ford, citing the nation's reliance on its forest resources, today announced the week beginning Oct. 1 National Forest Products Week. President said in a proclamation further cooperation among Federal and business leaders "is essential to continue to provide the products our people require."

West Puzzled as to Why Moscow Continues to Arm in Era of Detente

The Soviet aircraft carrier Kiev moving through the Dardanelles recently.

MOSCOW, Sept. 8—One of the more persistent questions raised about Soviet foreign policy is why the Soviet Union has built up its military strength while pledging its commitment to détente with the West.

Some diplomats tend to view it as reflecting the Kremlin's preoccupation with the "correlation of forces," Marxist jargon for the world balance of power.

"They're not doing it because of any particular motive but because of the prestige," one Western diplomat said. "This is part of the credentials of a great power." But, he adds, "once they have it they could be tempted to use it militarily and this is a very dangerous and worrisome development."

Armed Forces Steadily Upgraded

According to Western military specialists, the Soviet armed forces have been steadily upgraded over the last decade with advanced new equipment and greater tactical mobility. The armed forces are now estimated at close to four million men, or nearly twice the size of United States forces. The Soviet Union has also developed a more ambitious deep-water navy. This summer, it dispatched its first aircraft carrier, the 40,000-ton Kiev, from the Black Sea out into the Atlantic.

Moscow annually reveals a relatively modest defense budget that, Western specialists say, does not include costly programs like nuclear weapons development. These are tucked away under nondefense budget items.

Other military statistics are kept secret. But in one index of Soviet strength, the London-based Institute for Strategic Studies recently noted that Soviet-bloc forces of the Warsaw Pact had about 26,500 tanks in Europe while the North Atlantic Treaty Organization had 11,000.

The Kremlin denies that the Soviet Union poses a military threat.

"It is all a monstrous lie from beginning to end," the Soviet leader, Leonid I. Brezhnev, said last winter. "The Soviet Union has not the slightest intention of attacking anyone."

Western analysts disagree over whether the Soviet Union seeks military superiority or rough parity with the West. One Western military attaché pointed out that Moscow had to plan for the contingency of fighting on two fronts, against both China and the West.

A $1 Million Food-Stamp Embezzlement Laid to Head of White Plains Check Firm

The operator of a White Plains check-cashing concern was indicted yesterday by a Federal grand jury, charged with embezzling $1,067,102 in food-stamp money.

According to the indictment, the man, Harold Lane, 29 years old, president of Lane Check Cashing Inc., instead of depositing money from food-stamp customers into the Department of Agriculture's account at the Federal Reserve Bank, "converted the money to his own use."

Robert B. Fiske Jr., United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York, said that under the Federal program, Mr. Lane was licensed by the state and Westchester County to disburse food stamps and to collect food-stamp money. John Timbers, an assistant United States attorney, who presented the case to the grand jury, also charged Mr. Lane with submitting 22 different false statements to the Department of Agriculture. The statements, he said, "falsely represented that Mr. Lane had deposited the proceeds of Lane Check Cashing Inc.'s food stamp sales in the Federal Reserve Bank. The indictment also charged that in 1972, 1973 and 1974 Mr. Lane evaded Federal income tax totaling $256,802.

Mr. Lane, who lives at 65 Sherman Avenue in Mount Vernon, N. Y., could be sentenced to a total of 10 years in prison and fined up to $20,000 on the various charges.

Senate-House Conferees Reach a Major Decision on a 'Minimum Tax' for Wealthy Persons

By EDWIN L. DALE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—Senate and House conferees reached a key compromise today on a major decision on a 'minimum tax' for wealthy persons.

The agreement greatly increased the amount of income subject to the tax, and the conferees bogged down on lesser provisions and quit at 10 P.M. without completing the bill.

The compromise involved the "minimum tax" which has been in the law since 1930 and now affects about 300,000 persons.

Under the changes agreed to by the conferees, about 270,000 additional relatively well-off taxpayers would have to pay this tax, and most of those already paying it would have their tax increased, for an estimated additional revenue gain to the Treasury of slightly more than $1 billion next year.

Much of this additional tax would come from those who realize sizeable capital gains in stock market or other transactions.

The various changes agreed to today will apparently eliminate any future possibility that a wealthy taxpayer with sizeable income could pay no tax at all. The only exception would be if all of his or her income came from tax free interest on municipal bonds, and in that case there is no need even to file a tax return.

The compromise was crucial both for making the mansuad bill a substantial revenue-raiser and for winning support from Congressional liberals campaigning for "tax reform."

The conferees tightened the various preferences—real estate investments, oil drilling, farming losses for nonfarmers, motion pictures and sports franchises—to some degree an important toughening in the case of oil and gas. But in general the changes in the preference provisions were less sweeping than the House originally adopted. Instead, the conferees achieved much the same effect by lumping the main preferences into a much tougher minimum tax. These were the key changes:

Only the first $10,000 of "preference" income will be exempt from the minimum tax, instead of $30,000 now.

A taxpayer can deduct only half, instead of all, of his regular taxes paid in calculating the minimum tax—a provision that will affect those with large capital gains particularly.

The minimum tax rate is raised from 10 to 15 percent.

Taxpayers with huge regular deductions for such things as charitable contributions, heavy payments of state and local taxes and large interest payments would have to include in the minimum tax the amount by which those deductions exceed 60 percent of income. This will end the possibility of using deductions, which are not the same as tax preferences, to wipe out all income with the result of no tax paid. Only medical and casualty deductions would be exempt from this provision.

Separately, the conferees tightened the deduction that can be taken for interest paid on loans for investments and other purposes other than a home mortgage. The deduction would be limited to the amount of income from the investment plus $10,000, with any excess usable as a deduction in later years.

Selling of U.S. Registration Cards To Illegal Aliens Is Charged to 2

NEWARK, Sept. 8 (UPI)—A clerk for the Immigration and Naturalization Service and a former interpreter have been indicted on charges of selling phony alien registration cards to illegal aliens.

Rose Marie Munno, 24 years old, a clerk at the service's office in Newark, and Eugenio N. Garcia, 44, a former interpreter for the service, were charged yesterday with selling 13 fraudulent "green cards" and one United States citizenship identification card to aliens.

The 15-count Federal indictment said Mr. Garcia had recruited illegal aliens and had supplied biographical data to Miss Munno, who had access to the cards through her job.

B'nai B'rith Panel Rejects a Proposal for State Aid to Religious Schools

By IRVING SPIEGEL
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—A proposal that B'nai B'rith support state aid to religion-sponsored schools "for services and activities that are wholly secular in nature" prompted spirited debate, but was rejected in committee here today at the B'nai B'rith biennial convention at the Washington Hilton Hotel.

After three hours of hearing the views of delegates on opposing sides of the issue, a committee on "religion and the state" recommended, 7 to 2, that the 500,000-member Jewish service organization continue its traditional opposition to any tax-supported assistance to sectarian schools.

In effect, the committee's majority sustained arguments presented by representatives of the Anti-Defamation League, B'nai B'rith's civil rights agency, headed by Benjamin R. Epstein, national director, and Arnold Forster, general counsel of the league.

However, the committee's recommendation will be presented to a convention plenary session of 1,500 delegates later in the week and is expected to evoke further debate before a final decision is made.

Proponents of a change in B'nai B'rith policy cited the "child benefit" theory and its rationale that providing sectarian school pupils with such services as transportation, hot lunches, health facilities and textbooks for secular studies are for the individual child, and the "indirect assistance to religion" is inconsequential. They also argued that a change of policy would "recognize that the parent of a sectarian school pupil is a taxpayer supporting public education," and that "expanding the child benefit" principal in ways wholly unrelated to religious study or indoctrination would give him some relief and would be "equitable."

Steven J. Riekes of Omaha, who cast one of the minority votes, rejected the argument that such aid created constitutional fears of religious encroachment. "What is the danger of providing math textbooks to parochial schools?" he asked. "Those who oppose sound as if the Inquisition is around the corner."

But Meyer Eisenberg, a lawyer of Potosi, Md., warned that aid for parochial schools "is a piece of a fabric, a wedge for other intrusions; the theory that we should aid the child is merely a method of siphoning funds for parochial schools."

Both the Roman Catholic church and secular and religious leaders of Orthodox Judaism favor governmental aid for parochial schools. Orthodoxy and the Lubavitch Movement, the world wide body of Hasidic Jews, maintain large networks of such schools.

Rabbi Walter S. Wurzbarger, president of the Rabbinical Council of America, the Orthodox body, reached by telephone, expressed hope that B'nai B'rith "will change its policy." Rabbi Wurzbarger said that the religious schools trained a "substantial portion of the American youth population and make an important contribution to the enhancement of the quality of our educational system."

He cited the "mounting costs" of the all-day Jewish schools and said they were in need of both Federal aid and support by Jewish philanthropic groups.

Air Force Academy Discloses Resignation of Cadet in Inquiry

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo., Sept. 8 (AP)—A cadet under investigation for being near an off-limits area of the Air Force Academy with a bag containing stereo equipment and marijuana has resigned, an academy spokesman said yesterday.

Maj. Monte Blews said the cadet, who was a senior, would not be identified, nor will the academy say whether the stereo equipment was stolen.

A review board is investigating the case, and Major Blews said the board could have recommended dismissal of the cadet for possession of marijuana.

The cadet was apprehended early on Aug. 28 in a stairwell leading to an off-limits tunnel under a cadet-living area.

Major Blews said the cadet had $500 worth of stereo components.

Major Blews said Air Force Sec. Thomas Reed and the review board take action on the resignation, which submitted to Lieut. Gen. James R. academy superintendent.

The incident occurred after publications that a few cadets have been involved in a theft and forgery ring academy since 1972.

horr Bids Congress Define Issues in Intelligence Data Disclosure

By RICHARD D. LYONS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—Daniel Schorr today to define the issues in next confrontation between Congress and the Central Intelligence Agency. After publication, the House voted to investigate the unauthorized disclosure and Mr. Schorr was suspended by the network.

Today, Mr. Schorr, through his attorney, Joseph A. Califano, asked the committee in a letter to "identify precisely those portions of the final report, if any, that it believes would harm or have harmed the national security of this country," adding, "It is also respectfully requested that your committee provide copies of all memoranda from the C.I.A. or any other executive agency or department, or committee member or staffer, that identify those portions of the final report, if any, release of which would harm or have harmed the national security."

With this request, Mr. Schorr is seeking to establish a double defense: Refusing to disclose the source of the report on the grounds of the First Amendment's provisions on free speech grounds, and at the same time seeking an admission from the committee that little, if anything, in the report is secret and that the investigation is a waste of time. A six-month parallel investigation by the Justice Department has failed to uncover any violations of the Espionage Act resulting from publication of the report.

Representative John J. Flynt, the Georgia Democrat who is the chairman of the Ethics Committee, said he had sent an immediate reply to Mr. Schorr's letter, but refused to divulge its content. However, Mr. Flynt left the clear impression that he had refused to comply with Mr. Schorr's request. Mr. Schorr and three journalists from New York have been subpoenaed to appear before the committee next Wednesday to answer questions about the unauthorized disclosure. Their collective position has been that they will appear, but will not disclose the document's source.

In an open session today the committee questioned 16 former staff aides of the now-disbanded Pike committee on their knowledge of the unauthorized disclosure. All testified under oath that they were not aware of the details.

The last witness, James C. Minge 3d, declined to testify in open session. However, Mr. Minge, an investigator for the committee, testified in private.

A U.N. Group Stresses Links Between Israel and South Africa

Special to The New York Times
UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Sept. 8—A United Nations committee approved a report today attesting to the "ever-closer collaboration" between Israel and South Africa.

The report was endorsed unanimously by the 18 members of the United Nations Special Committee Against Apartheid, a group established to combat the South African Government's apartheid or race-separation system. The document, which was prepared by a committee subgroup is expected to be used by some delegates as a springboard for renewed Arab charges at the next General Assembly that Zionism is a form of racism.

The report concludes that close relations between Israel and South Africa have historical roots but were intensified after black African countries broke relations with Israel.

Beef Output Expected to Rise
CHICAGO (UPI)—The large corn crop last year is primarily responsible for making 1976 a record year for beef production, according to the National Live Stock and Meat Board here. Total red meat production is expected to increase from 36.6 billion pounds in 1975 to 37.3 billion pounds this year. Most of the increase will be in beef, but pork production will also rise, the board said.

Black Police Officials Establish Organization in Effort to Expand Influence in Criminal Justice Field

By THOMAS A. JOHNSON

Special to The New York Times

ARLINGTON, Va., Sept. 8—More than 60 of the nation's top-ranking black police officials today organized the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives in an effort to give blacks more influence in the field of criminal justice on the national and local levels. They argued that an emergency exists within the nation's urban centers and that it is vital that high level, black police expertise be given a greater consideration in fighting crime. Coming from 24 states, and all above the rank of captain, the black police officials elected Newark's Police Director, Hubert Williams, as the group's chairman and Burtell Jefferson, the assistant chief of the Washington Metropolitan Police Department as finance chairman. While most of the participants hold membership in racially mixed organizations such as the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the black law enforcement officials insisted that there was now no national structure that would consider their views on fighting and preventing crime in the nation's increasingly black cities. Their efforts on the first day of a two-day meeting at the Twin Bridges Marriott Hotel represent a major thrust on several levels to make the entire field of criminal justice work more effectively for the black community. Black social scientists, criminologists, civil rights workers and community groups have charged repeatedly that the nation's entire "criminal justice industry" functions effectively only for the long entrenched and mostly white officials within that field. Titled "A Symposium on Reducing Crime in Urban, Low Income Areas," the meeting is being sponsored by the Joint Center for Political Studies, the Police

Foundation and the Federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. The morning program was temporarily disrupted by an argument over whether to organize a national group. The interruption came as Dr. Herrington J. Bryce, Director of Research for the Joint Center, opened a discussion on the impact of crime in black areas. Mr. Williams then asked to be heard on an emergency resolution. Committee Leaves Meeting Mr. Williams and others argued that the group should organize since it was unlikely that such a meeting could be convened through the members' individual resources. A 17-member committee, that included as a guest Representative John Conyers, Democrat of Michigan, then left the meeting to formulate a statement of purpose and goals that was later accepted unanimously by the general body. Atlanta's Commissioner of Public Safety, Reginald Eaves, and Bill Bracey, a deputy chief of the New York City Police Department said in an interview that the goals of the organization would include conducting research into urban crimes, establishing links with similar groups, seeking of ways to effectively deal with racism in the field of criminal justice, evaluating and recommending legislation on criminal justice at all levels of government. Although the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration was a financial sponsor of the session, the agency was criticized both publicly and privately by black police officials who contended that it had concentrated on supplying departments with a vast and expensive array of armaments to put down urban riots as opposed to assisting community groups in the prevention of

Site Lingerin' Tension, Boston's Third Year of Court-Ordered School Busing Begins Without Incident

By JOHN KIFNER
Special to The New York Times

Sept. 8—Public schools here today for the third year of court-ordered busing for school officials, who have been here for the last several days that tensions that have marked the years of school opening had an optimistic after the uneventful first day of classes, said Superintendent Marion Fahey, was

Lingerin' tensions, however, last night in a clash with South Boston, the neighborhood has been the center of court-ordered busing. A white driver of a black driver of a bus, battled with the police, officers were injured. There were arrests last night in South Boston more in a similar outbreak of stoning in the Charlestown neighborhood.

In clear, crisp weather, the yellow buses began rolling this morning under a plan that Federal District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. calls "Phase II-B" to indicate it is only a slight modification of the city-wide plan he ordered into effect last year.

The atmosphere was more relaxed than the massive display of police power, including helicopters and rooftop riflemen, that marked the first day of school last year. This year, the calm opening was broken only by a brief outbreak of bottle throwing in the Charlestown area, which produced one arrest.

All Quiet in South Boston

According to the school department figures, attendance was up over last year, too, with 69.4 percent of the expected enrollment going to school. Last year, 59.2 percent of those expected showed up on the first day of classes.

In South Boston, the streets were almost deserted for much of the morning. Three buses carrying black children pulled up to the front of the old brick school building precisely at 7:45. Some of the children smiled and waved for the television cameramen and photographers.

For Jerome Winegar, the young headmaster brought in from St. Paul, Minn., last spring under Judge Garrity's order placing South Boston High School under court receivership, the opening day marked the beginning of the test whether he and his new team of administrators could change the troubled school.

Only freshmen—about a quarter of those reported to the school today. Upper classmen will report over the next two days. Today there were 38 of an expected 211 black students, 82 of 202 whites and 10 of 53 "other minorities."

Attendance was also low at two other high schools. In Charlestown, 190 of an expected 552 students reported. In Dorchester, an increasingly mixed neighborhood where, although the high school has been calm for the last two years, there have been racial incidents over the summer, 653 students of an expected 1,472 arrived.

A clear picture of the attendance pattern will probably not emerge until next week. The number of white students enrolled in the school system will be of particular interest, since, according to school department figures, some 17,216 white students have left the public schools here over the last two years.

Enrollment Projected at 75,448

The enrollment for this year is projected by the department at 75,448 students, roughly 47 percent white, 41 percent black and 12 percent "other minorities."

In Charlestown, a mile square, largely Irish working class neighborhood, about 100 white youths gathered near the high school, across from the Bunker Hill battle monument. As the police pushed them back, several bottles flew out of the crowd, one striking one of the Federal marshals assigned to the school.

Last night, anti-busing activists in South Boston drove through the streets in a 100-car motorcade to show their continued resistance. After the police broke up the motorcade, saying it had no permit, an angry crowd gathered near a subway and bus terminal at Andrew Square. A transit bus approached, and spotting its black driver, the crowd hurled rocks and bottles, breaking the windshield and cutting him. Three Metropolitan Bay Transit Authority policemen moved in to help the driver and grab a youth out of the crowd.

The angry crowd attacked the police, hurling rocks and beating one of the officers with a crowbar, freeing the youth. According to police sources, the transit policemen were backed against a cyclone fence with their guns drawn when city patrol force units rushed in to rescue them.

There were more rock and bottle throwing clashes. In one, a motorcycle policeman was hit in the face with a rock, knocking out several teeth.

Energy Report Is Issued

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (UPI)—The United States has moved closer to a severe electrical energy crisis during the past year and faces the threat of blackouts or power reductions during the next decade unless existing problems can be solved, the nation's electrical utilities said today. A pair of reports by the National Electric Reliability Council, formed by the utility industry in 1968, said there were severe problems with nuclear energy, with Government regulation of other fuel sources, with pollution and power plant locations and with financing of new power plants.

Fewer and Stronger Cold Remedies Urged

By HAROLD M. SCHEMCK JR.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—Americans should be offered fewer and more powerful ingredients in nonprescription cough, cold, asthma and allergy medicines, for which they spend $735 million a year, a panel of experts has advised the Food and Drug Administration after a major three-and-a-half-year study.

In response, the drug agency said it would allow over-the-counter sales of 10 drugs previously sold only by prescription or in small doses. The previous over-the-counter doses were so small as to make the drugs' effectiveness doubtful.

The panel's report said there was no generally accepted treatment that would prevent, cure or even shorten the length of a common cold. The roughly 35,000 to 50,000 products on the market today are only for the temporary relief of individual symptoms, said Dr. Francis C. Lowell, chairman of the panel.

No Need for Medicine
In terms of the patient's ultimate well-being, Dr. Lowell said in answering a question at a news conference, there is no need for the cold sufferer to take any medicine at all. Dr. Lowell, an allergy expert and associate professor emeritus of medicine at Harvard Medical School, said that was his opinion as a physician.

He said the panel's view was that individuals should not take drugs that they did not need. Accordingly, he said, they recommended to the Commissioner of Food and Drugs that the number of ingredients in approved over-the-counter "cough-cold" medicines be kept as low as possible.

Although many products on the market today contain four or five active ingredients, the panel recommended a maximum of three each—one of which should represent a different fundamental group. An example would be a product containing one ingredient for relief of nasal congestion, one for cough and one for headache.

Dr. Lowell said the proposed policy on drug combinations represented the heart of the recommendations of the 350-page report.

"We expect that it will set many new directions for the drug industry and will cause many if not all products to be reformulated or relabeled in some way," he said.

While there are believed to be more than 35,000 products on the market for the relief of symptoms of colds, allergies and asthma, almost all of them are based on one or more of about 120 common active ingredients.

The panel's review was concentrated on the safety and efficacy of these ingredients. Only 44 were found by the panel to be clearly safe and effective. About 60 were put in a category indicating that more research is needed to prove their effectiveness even though they have been on the market for years.

been emphasized in over-the-counter drugs, sometimes to the point of rendering the drugs ineffective.

More powerful drugs have usually been restricted to the prescription market, available only on a doctor's order.

The panel, however, recommended that 14 current prescription drugs be released for direct over-the-counter sales. The F.D.A. said it agreed with the recommendation concerning 10 of these drugs.

Drugs Are Identified
Five of these are antihistamines. Two are dilators of the bronchial passages for use by asthmatics. These are metoprolol and theophylline. The remaining three drug compounds recommended for over-the-counter use are the nasal decongestants oxymetazoline, pseudoephedrine and zylometazoline.

In a written comment on the panel report, the Health Research Group, a unit of Ralph Nader's Public Citizen, said that cough and cold drugs had long been "a witches' brew of unproven chemicals, and this proposal barely even stars up the brew."

The statement called the panel's report a major concession to industry. The Proprietary Association, representing industry, said the panel report showed that most of the ingredients in the major nonprescription cough and cold products had been confirmed as safe and effective.

The report will be published in the Federal Register for comment by interested persons and will be reviewed by the F.D.A.

Gloria Merenda, a first-grade teacher at Stevens Mason Elementary School in Detroit, instructing her class on routes of buses leaving before noon yesterday. Because of budget cutbacks, some students have half-day programs.

Cut-Back Detroit Schools Open in Air of Uncertainty

By REGINALD STUART
Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, Sept. 8—When the doors of Stevens Mason Elementary School opened here this morning, hundreds of enthusiastic children were soon at their desks giggling, chattering, making new friends and meeting old ones they had not seen over the summer vacation.

In the small office of the school principal, Robert E. Turner, things were jumping, too. It was typical of a first day, he said after entertaining a mass of inquiries, as if he were an auctioneer at a busy sale.

Much to his delight, even some students who were pulled out of class last January when they became involved in the school district's small-scale desegregation program showed up today, ready for classes.

Mr. Turner's enthusiasm over the smooth start of what may be a long year was somewhat dampened by his concern for the problems facing the city's school system, the fifth largest in the United States.

Because of the voters' rejection of a property-tax increase, the Detroit Board of Education has slashed $11 million from its budget, laying off teachers and other personnel, restricting some programs and dropping others. The result has been widespread dissatisfaction among parents and wariness among schoolmen like Mr. Turner.

Prevalent Feeling of Uncertainty
"It's a feeling of uncertainty," said the 40-year-old educator, who has been principal of this northeast Detroit school of 650 students for three years. "It goes all the way from the bottom to the top," he said.

As a result of the tax-increase rejection and the cutbacks in the budget, elementary schools are offering thousands of first-grade students only a half-day program and have dropped instrumental music classes through Grade Eight.

When high school students return tomorrow, they will find that few, if any elective courses are being offered, thus requiring more time before they graduate. Some 500 teachers throughout the school system were taken out of the classroom and placed in the so-called substitute pool. Nearly 1,500 custodians were laid off, along with many other support personnel.

"With the cutbacks, we can't offer first-graders a full program," said Mr. Turner, whose school opened with a shortage of supplies because of a strike by some school system deliverers and lack of funds to buy all that was needed. "But they will get good training in the basics," he went on. Mason School, like many others here, lost four of its five teacher aides and two teachers, and it had to make other cutbacks.

Parents Are Offered Some Hope
Parents, disappointed over the cutbacks, still have some hope, however.

For one thing, the Michigan State Board of Education, in an 11th-hour decision, rejected the half-day program for first graders. The board ordered Detroit officials to offer a full day's program to first graders. The city School Superintendent, Arthur Jefferson, has said that this could be done by next week, but that move would require cuts in other parts of the budget.

School officials here have not been specific how they will carry out the state order.

Voters here will get another chance, in November, to act on the property-tax increase they rejected last month, and there has been an intense campaign to get out the vote. If the tax increase is approved, school officials say, many of the reduced or deleted programs could be restored for the spring semester.

The popular interscholastic athletics program, also eliminated in the budget cuts, announced last month, was subsequently salvaged. After appeals from professional athletes, high school athletes and the press and broadcast news organizations, a private donor—the Bank of The Commonwealth—gave the school system $100,000 to help continue its sports programs. The cuts are believed to have been the most extensive in the history of the school system.

Gov. Marvin Mandel with his wife, Jean, and her son, John Michael, as they walked to Federal Court in Baltimore yesterday.

Jury Selection Under Way in Trial Of Gov. Mandel and 4 Associates

By BEN A. FRANKLIN
Special to The New York Times

BALTIMORE, Sept. 8—The bribery and fraud conspiracy trial of Gov. Marvin Mandel of Maryland and four of his close friends and political allies got off to a slow start in Federal Court here today as lawyers on both sides began the process of selecting a jury.

There was a hint, however, in the routine of jury selection of political interest to come.

Both sides agreed that it might be Monday before the completion of a jury of 12 and two alternates, to be picked from a panel of 63 Marylanders. Throughout the day, Governor Mandel, a 53-year-old Democrat, sat attentively in the courtroom with his four co-defendants, Harry W. Rodgers 3d, 48; his brother, William A. Rodgers, 50; W. Dale Hess, 46, and Ernest N. Cory Jr., 62.

The Rodgers brothers and Mr. Hess are accused of giving Mr. Mandel bribes—shares in lucrative real estate interests—in return for the Governor's favoritism in enhancing the value of a race track that they and the other alleged conspirators secretly purchased in 1971. The trial of a fifth co-defendant, Irvin Kovens, 58, has been separated from that of the others because he has had a recurrence of heart disease. All six of the defendants have pleaded not guilty.

Twice during the day the five defendants were required to stand in the courtroom and announce their names before groups of prospective jurors as United States District Judge John E. Pratt sought to weed out of the jury panel persons with personal, political or business relationships with any of the accused. Each time, Mr. Mandel, looking tanned and relaxed despite the absence of his ever-present pipe—the usually chain smokers' pipeful of cherry-flavored tobacco—rose and spoke his name in a loud voice.

The excuses from jury duty granted today—they totaled 36 by the day's end—reflected in many cases the pervasive web of Democratic politics in this state, as did the presence of Judge Pratt, whose court is in the District of Columbia, 45 miles away.

Predicts His Acquittal
None of the nine Federal judges of either party on the Maryland District Court bench had removed himself sufficiently from the Old Line state's politics to avoid disqualification for the Mandel trial.

Judge Pratt, a brisk former Marine with a reputation as a stickler for judicial efficiency, had to be drafted from Washington for this trial. He will hold court here Mondays through Thursdays, except this week both to give himself one day a week on his own bench in Washington and to give Mr. Mandel one day in Annapolis. Predicting his acquittal, Governor Mandel has made elaborate arrangements to continue functioning as Governor throughout the trial, which may run through Thanksgiving Day, or even Christmas.

Hoover Estate-Tax Issue Raises New Question on the Use of F.B.I. Files

By JOHN M. CREWSDON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3—No Federal estate tax was paid on a collection of memoranda and correspondence belonging to J. Edgar Hoover, the late Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, that have been characterized by Mr. Hoover's longtime secretary as his personal property, a House subcommittee has learned.

The secretary, Helen W. Gandy, has acknowledged that she destroyed the files after Mr. Hoover's death in May of 1972, but has denied that they contained any official bureau documents.

The disclosure that the value of the files had not been declared as part of Mr. Hoover's personal estate, coupled with an assertion by court appraisers that Miss Gandy had told them the files were F.B.I. property, raises anew the question of whether highly sensitive bureau documents were taken from Mr. Hoover's office by his aides and destroyed in the weeks after he died.

Two estate appraisers employed by the Federal courts here, Thomas A. Mead and Barry Gagon, testified recently that neither Miss Gandy nor any of Mr. Hoover's aides had advised them of the existence of any personal documents in their assessment of the value of his estate two months after Mr. Hoover's death.

Items Were Sorted
Miss Gandy has previously said under oath before a House subcommittee that some 35 file drawers of "personal" materials, including correspondence, were removed from Mr. Hoover's office to his home in the weeks after he died on May 2, 1972.

She said that it was there that she had sorted through the items, deciding that none of them were official F.B.I. documents and had them put through a paper shredder in accordance with Mr. Hoover's wishes.

Representative Belize S. Abzug, the Manhattan Democrat who heads the House Subcommittee on Government Information and Individual Rights, before which Miss Gandy testified last December, said in a statement that "such a collection of papers," which included "signed, original documents from the major figures of American life since the early 1920's," should have been worth between $100,000 and $500,000.

Mrs. Abzug's subcommittee has been investigating for several months in an effort to learn whether any bureau documents that bore on F.B.I. intelligence operations or contained confidential information about public personages were deliberately destroyed after Mr. Hoover's death.

In their statement to the Abzug subcommittee, Mr. Mead and Mr. Gagon, the court appraisers, said that in surveying the Hoover household they had been told by Miss Gandy that several filing cabinets and cardboard boxes in the basement, which they did not examine, were F.B.I. property and should not be appraised. Miss Gandy later denied to the subcommittee that she had ever made such an assertion.

One subcommittee aide noted today the conflict between Miss Gandy's testimony that the shredded files had all been of a personal nature, and the appraisers' assertion that she had described them as "government property."

Maintaining that "she can't have it both ways," the aide said that if the files had not contained F.B.I. documents, questions might be raised about a violation of the Federal tax laws by those who ordered or carried out the destruction.

If some official bureau documents were among those shredded, those involved might be in violation of statutes that govern the preservation of Government papers and property.

Just who was responsible for the Hoover estate at the time of the destruction is unclear.

Uncertainty

Donald, alternately smoking a pipe, argued. "Every one concepts we talked about in the steelworkers' organization was formed we got snare in office. ### A New Space Craft Is Named Enterprise

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (AP)—Star Trek fans have apparently balked at the space agency's choice of name for the country's new seven-passenger space shuttle, which is to make its first orbital flight in 1979.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration had suggested the name of the Constitution and had even planned to unveil the shuttle orbiter on Sept. 17, Constitution Day.

But Star Trek fans initiated a letter-writing campaign to President Ford to name the shuttle for the starship Enterprise in the televised science fiction drama. The show has been out of production for years, but remains popular.

Mr. Ford did not refer to the letters, but White House sources said that he overruled NASA officials after the letter-writing campaign.

The President told the Administrator of NASA, James Fletcher, yesterday, "I'm a little partial to the name Enterprise," and added that he had served in the Pacific aboard a Navy ship that serviced an aircraft carrier of that name.

Beame and Goldin Disclose a 'Fail-Safe' System to End Hidden Deficits

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Mayor Beame and Comptroller Harrison I. Goldin unveiled plans yesterday for a new city agency and an elaborate "fail-safe" mechanism to eliminate the possibility of hidden deficits in future municipal budgets.

The new mechanism, the Integrated Financial Management System, is to become the chief vehicle for reform of the city's books, Mr. Beame and Mr. Goldin said in a joint presentation that, in itself, symbolized the fact that fiscal experts predict the new system will drastically transform the politics of New York City's budget.

Disputes over the size of the city's deficits, for instance, have been one of the staples of local politics for more than a decade at least. Yesterday, both the Mayor and the Comptroller—who have had their share of such feuds—predicted that the disputes would be rendered obsolete by the new accounting system, which the law requires to be in place by next July 1.

The purpose of their joint news conference was to announce that, despite enormous obstacles, the city was "on target" toward the July 1 goal, and to disclose for the first time exactly how the new system is going to work.

Over the two-year period of installation, it is costing the city more than $16 million—much of it paid to five private outside consultants—to install the vast network of controls that mayoral aides said would take years to put into place in a private corporation. The system itself is extremely complicated, but the aides said it could be explained in terms of the following implications:

In the past, only a handful of budget analysts inside the bureaucracy were privy to information on whether city agencies were spending below or above their allocated levels. The new system requires actual spending to be fed monthly into computers, so that everyone can see whether the agencies are running in the red.

Up until last year, there was no uniform system for recording expenses or incoming revenues—whether a cost should be counted when it is incurred or when the cash itself is to be paid out, for instance. The new mechanism puts into place a uniform system, eliminating the questionable practices of years past that hint the fact that the city accumulated billions of dollars in "hidden deficits."

A year and a half ago, Mr. Beame and Mr. Goldin engaged in a bitter dispute over whether employees that the Mayor said were being laid off were, in fact, being laid off. Under the new system, a central data bank on personnel is being created so that such disputes can no longer take place.

80 People in Bureau
Overseeing the computerized system will be a new city agency, the Financial Information Services Agency, which is to have roughly 80 technicians, most of them transferred from the Comptroller's offices and the Budget Bureau. The new agency, in turn, is to be overseen by a governing commission appointed by both the Mayor and the Comptroller, and an executive director, whom Mr. Beame said would be selected later this month.

The idea behind the new agency, according to Kenneth S. Axelson, the city's outgoing Deputy Mayor for Finance, is to overcome the inherent problems stemming from the city's dual political structure—the fact that the Mayor has control of spending, while the Comptroller, frequently a political rival of the Mayor's, is in charge of the books.

Many fiscal aides credit Mr. Axelson with being the main force behind the new system, which was also partly mandated by City Charter changes that the voters approved last year. The two chief creators of the system have been Stephen Clifford, the special deputy comptroller, and David Woodbridge, an executive at Chase Manhattan Bank, who has been on leave to help install it.

Mr. Axelson said that there was no intention to dilute the traditional independence of the Comptroller's office and that the new agency would probably require state legislation to be put fully into operation.

What the system means, Mr. Beame said, is that "for the first time, all city agencies will be working out of one file cabinet." Mr. Goldin put it another way. "It will eliminate the opportunity for obfuscation," he said. "From now on, everybody will be talking about the same data base."

While praising the new system's benefits, both Mr. Goldin and Mr. Beame took pains to say they did not mean that the city had failed to make proper disclosure of its finances in the past. The issue is seen as especially critical in light of a potentially explosive investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission into allegations of fraud and deception in city fiscal affairs.

"Everything was revealed," Mr. Beame said sharply, when asked about past practices, adding that the new system simply put the city's accounts in a "more informative, logical basis."

NEW YORK 1 OF 3 STATES WITH DROP IN TOTAL JOBS

New York is one of only three states—along with Florida and Montana—that lost jobs, during the year ended last June, according to Bureau of Labor Statistics reports yesterday. The 47 others showed gains.

Herbert Bienstock, the Federal agency's regional commissioner, said the New York losses were due to declines in New York City, which lost 103,000 jobs in the period—71,000 among Government employees. The city loss more than offset upstate gains, leaving the state with a net loss of 30,700.

Of the nation's 50 largest metropolitan areas, Mr. Bienstock said, 42 gained jobs during the year. But the New York metropolitan area—New York City and Westchester, Rockland and Putnam Counties—suffered the sharpest loss, 101,700 jobs or 2.8 percent.

The Detroit metropolitan area gained 45,400 jobs; Los Angeles-Long Beach, 37,400; Houston, 33,800; Anaheim-Santa Ana-Garden Grove, Calif., 31,000; Washington, D.C., 22,800, and Chicago, 18,000.

Blacks Attacked by White Youths With Clubs in Washington Square

By JOSEPH B. TREASTER

A band of at least 20 white youths swarmed through Washington Square Park last night, yelling racial epithets and attacking blacks with baseball bats and sticks, the police said.

At least 13 young black men—and perhaps some Hispanic youths—were injured in the raid, which witnesses said might have stemmed from a dispute over a sale of marijuana.

Doctors at St. Vincent's Hospital said that most of the injuries consisted of cuts and bruises on the head. Most were not serious, they said, but one youth was described as in "very serious condition" and another was suffering from a "badly fractured face and eye."

Witnesses said the youths swept in through the southwest corner of the park at about 8 o'clock, dashed toward the arch at Fifth Avenue and then ran south and continued out to the park. The police estimated that the raid had lasted no more than six minutes.

Sgt. Edward Mezzadri of the Sixth Precinct said that he did not know who the white youths were, but that "it was not an organized gang."

"It was a band of white youths," he asserted. "Nobody knows where they came from."

However, several witnesses said they believed the youths were part of a group of youths of Italian descent that frequents the area in the Village near West Fourth Street and Avenue of the Americas.

Brandishing Weapons

Roosevelt Bacus, a black youth who came to the hospital where some of his friends were being treated, was at the scene of the outbreak. He said that the white youths had started assembling in front of a McDonald's at West Third Street and Avenue of the Americas a half hour before the attack.

Mr. Bacus said the youths had brandished their weapons openly and that no policemen were present at the time.

Sergeant Mezzadri, who arrived later, quoted witnesses as saying that about 200 persons—an even mix of whites and blacks—had been enjoying the late summer evening in the park at the time of the attack.

Nancy Trichter, a 25-year-old Rutgers law student, had been walking with a black girlfriend when the youths swarmed in.

"They were chasing all of us," she said, "but the only people they hit were black. It was completely racist."

Standing near a puddle of blood, Alan Birbaum, a 29-year-old minister of the Native American Church of New York, said, "They were screaming, 'Get the niggers out of the park!'"

Mr. Birbaum and several other young men and women who frequent the park said that a white youth had been hit in the face and knocked down in a fight Tuesday with a black drug dealer.

"He said he got some bad stuff," one of the youths said. "He wanted his money back and the guy hit him. He and his friends came back for revenge tonight."

Sergeant Mezzadri said that one police officer had been assigned to the park, but that he was on his meal break when the attack occurred. He said that two radio cars had been patrolling in the area at the time, but that neither had been adjacent to the park, so "no police officers witnessed the incident."

Immediately after the attack, Sergeant Mezzadri said, 30 members of the Police Department's Patrol Unit were sent in "to make sure the park was peaceful and there was no retribution." He said that detectives and other policemen were searching for the club-wielding youths.

ICE TO REINFORCE TROL AT MIDNIGHT

Officers at desk jobs got 16 days off. Officers also get 28 vacation days a year.

The new schedules that have been set for officers on patrol will work 15 minutes each day and 10 days off annually. Desk officers will be ordered to return eight-hour day, thereby losing all day off.

Officers involved in revising the schedule for anonymity because the orders have not been officially posted and because the P.B.A. has appealed the impasse panel ruling to the city's Board of Collective Bargaining.

One commander, familiar with the details of the new schedules, said Commissioner Codd and his aides decided to "substantially beef up" the midnight-to-8 A.M. tour because it had been severely reduced in strength during the last 15 months. The department has acknowledged that precincts now sometimes have only one patrol car available during the early morning hours.

"Although the midnight tour has the lowest crime rate, the workload had gotten too much for the men we had assigned," the police official said. "Right now, that's the tour that seems to need the most help."

According to police data, an average of 1,167 officers are assigned each day to the midnight-to-8 A.M. patrol force. In the new schedules, about 300 more of-icers are expected to be posted for duty each day from midnight to 8 A.M.

The 8 A.M.-to-4 P.M. tour now has an average daily work strength of 2,899 and the 4 P.M.-to-midnight patrol has 2,228 officers, according to the police department. These two patrol tours also will be increased but not as much proportionally as the midnight-to-8 A.M. complement, a police spokesman said.

About 15,000 officers are currently assigned to the Field Services Bureau or the patrol force. But only 6,000 are available daily because of normal days off, vacation time, sick leave and special assignments.

Overall, the new schedules will require each officer to work at least 10 more days each year. Police statisticians said this would be equivalent to hiring 500 more policemen at an annual cost of about $16 million in salaries and fringe benefits.

An official who was involved in devising the new schedules said the department planned to put them into operation early next month.

The P.B.A. in a statement yesterday reiterated its claim that the increase in the city's crime rate was caused by police layoffs. At its annual convention in upstate Tannersville, the P.B.A. said that unless the police hiring freeze was soon ended the department would decline "from the finest in the world to an inefficient, 10th-rate force."

Canadian Fishing Boat Seized

SEATTLE, Sept. 8 (UPI)—A Coast Guard cutter seized the 36-foot Canadian fishing vessel Retirement early this morning in the Strait of Georgia and accompanied it to Bellingham. A spokesman for the Coast Guard said the Canadian vessel was violating territorial fishing laws by its presence one mile inside United States territorial waters.

Senate Backs Policy Barring Bias in Hiring

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (UPI)—The Senate passed a resolution today forbidding discrimination in its hiring, pay and promotion practices against any Senate employee.

The resolution, approved by voice vote, also urges members and officers to encourage the hiring of women and members of minorities "at all levels of employment" in the Senate. The resolution is an expression of the "sense of the Senate," it does not carry the force of law.

Both the Senate and the House have come under criticism in recent years for not fully implementing Federal anti-discrimination laws within their own internal hiring practices.

42 Coins Caught in Midair Set

World Record for Snatching

ROANOKE, Va. (UPI)—Gary Grear, 30 years old, flipped 42 coins off the back of his arm, snatched them in midair and set a new world record for coin snatching. His feat broke the Guinness World Book of Records mark set by an Englishman who coin-snatched 39 British pennies.

To snatch coins, one flips them off the back of his forearm and catches them with the same hand before they fall to the ground.

Mr. Grear stacked 43 half dollars on his arm to set the record at 42. He used one more than necessary because he says the bottom coin always sticks to his arm.

Free Child Services Go Begging At New York Foundling Hospital

By LENA WILLIAMS

Help in the form of free shelter, food, parental guidance and rehabilitative work is available to children and their families at the New York Foundling Hospital Center for Parent and Child Development, but few families are using the free services, according to the hospital's director.

In citing an example of this situation, Dr. Vincent J. Fontana, director of the hospital, pointed yesterday to the case of Joanne Bashold, whose 5-day-old baby was killed Monday by the family's dog when left alone by the mother in a bare flat.

Lives at Stake

Dr. Fontana and Senator Roy M. Goodman, who has called for a campaign to curb child abuse in New York, expressed concern in a news conference at the hospital that many families and mothers like Miss Bashold did not know about these services.

"If a social worker, doctor, nurse or a neighbor had told that woman about our services here, perhaps that baby would be alive today," said Dr. Fontana.

Senator Goodman said the Bashold incident was an extreme but not exceptional case. "Neglectful treatment, the beating and burning, the sexual abuse of children are daily occurrences in this city," he said.

Many mothers express fears that they will be labeled child abusers if they come to the center, although half come voluntarily, according to officials and mothers at the hospital.

"I don't want my name used or my picture taken because people will automatically say she abuses her child," said a 16-year-old mother who was at the center yesterday with her 17-month-old baby. "I love my daughter, but I didn't know how to care for her, and that's why I'm here."

Only half of the 150 beds at the hospital, which is at 1175 Third Avenue, are currently being used. In an effort to encourage more people to use the facility, Senator Goodman and Dr. Fontana called for the establishment of an easy-to-remember child abuse emergency telephone number (persons seeking information can call 878-2200), the distribution of flyers outlining services at the center, and an appropriation of more city and state funds to establish similar centers throughout the city.

70 AMERICANS CONTINUE TO FAST IN MEXICAN JAILS

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 8 (AP)—More than 70 American prisoners were in the second day of a hunger strike today in Mexican prisons, but the protest appeared to be declining because of Mexican initiatives intended to release hundreds of Americans from jails here.

President Luis Echeverria Alvarez has reportedly informed American officials that at least 200 United States citizens may be released on parole as early as November. About 570 Americans are in Mexican jails, including approximately 50 in Mexico City. Nearly all are held on drug charges. Their sentences range from 5 to 15 years, with 7 years the most common.

The Mexican Government said that 52 Americans had refused to eat since yesterday morning at two prisons in the capital. It said there was virtually no support for the strike at the city's two other prisons.

SAN ANTONIO, Sept. 8 (UPI)—President Echeverria rushed at a picket here last night and ripped the man's placard because he said, he was insulted by the message. The 54-year-old President, here on a two-day visit aimed at strengthening United States-Mexican relations, destroyed two signs, one reading "Free Political Prisoners!" and the other saying, "End Political Deprivations!"

Aides Say Reagan Will Campaign For Ford if He Gets Assignments

Californian, Planning Busy Speaking Schedule, Called Impatient With Lag in His 'Orders'

By JON NORDHEIMER
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 8—Ronald Reagan, now vacationing in Mexico, is willing to campaign for the Ford-Dole ticket this fall, his aides said today, but so far the White House has been slow to provide him with a speaking schedule.

It was learned that the President telephoned his former rival last week and invited Mr. Reagan and his wife "to come to Washington and spend a night in the White House." But the former California Governor declined the invitation, his aides reported, saying that he had no plans to travel to Washington any time soon.

The response was not intended as a rebuff, they said. Mr. Reagan, they explained, has been putting together a personal speaking schedule between now and November. His dates are crowded, they said, and he has grown impatient with the White House's slowness in issuing him his "traveling orders."

No Further Contact Reported

Since the telephone chat, there has been no further contact from the White House, the aides said.

Mr. Reagan will travel extensively over the next nine weeks to speak at political fund raisers across the country on behalf of local Republicans who actively supported his challenge against the President. But only on a few occasions, such as his appearance on behalf of Governor Meldrim Thomson Jr. of New Hampshire, an early Reagan supporter, will he waive his customary speaking fee of $5,000, his aides said.

According to Michael Deaver, Mr. Reagan's chief of staff, the Californian assured the President in their five-minute telephone talk that he would do whatever he could to help the ticket. "But I've also got to get back to making a living," Mr. Deaver quoted him as telling the President.

It is expected that Mr. Reagan's return to private life will be a profitable one. He resumes his daily radio commentary broadcasts shortly and his advisers expect the number of stations carrying his political comments to grow to more than 500 by the first of the year, with a daily audience of about 40 million. In addition, King Features will distribute his weekly newspaper column, and Mr. Reagan will keep busy with a heavy load of speaking engagements, his advisers said.

"If he wanted to he could do 20 speeches a month for the next year, and that would add up to $100,000 a month in speaking fees," said Mr. Deaver. "But he won't do that many of course. After the election he'll slow down to about eight or 10 a month."

Other sources said Mr. Reagan's gross income over the next year might swell to $750,000.

There has been some discussion with the Republican National Committee, Mr. Deaver continued, about Mr. Reagan's doing a 30-minute national telecast on behalf of the Republican Party, not the ticket. It was expected that most of this program would be devoted to Mr. Reagan's comparison of the Republican and Democratic platforms.

Mr. Reagan was also expected to participate in a closed-circuit hookup of leading Republican figures in early October for fund raising purposes.

Reserved Judgment on Platforms
In his first commentary taped for radio broadcast, Mr. Reagan examined the two major parties' platforms, but for the most part reserved judgment. Subsequent broadcasts reverted to themes Mr. Reagan explored during the long campaign for the nomination, ones that are basically anti-Washington, anti-big government, and opposed to aspects of détente with the Communist world.

Resentment in the Reagan camp over what had been considered the unfair tactics employed by the White House in the desperate scramble for convention delegates has been dissipated for the most part, as the unsuccessful challenger and his staff move further away from the memory of defeat in Kansas City.

Several key staff members have gone to work for the Republican ticket, and Mr. Reagan himself has put aside most of his reservations about his former adversaries.

"The Governor sincerely believes that the country cannot afford four years of Jimmy Carter and the stakes are too high to wallow in recriminations," Mr. Deaver asserted.

Ford Terms Remarks by Carter On F.B.I. Head 'Contradictory'

ed to say the least," at two "contradictory" statements on the matter made yesterday by Mr. Carter.

He said that the former Georgia Governor had "showed a lack of compassion" in saying that Mr. Kelley should have been dismissed for accepting favors at a "very sad and difficult time." The Director's wife was terminally ill with cancer when two window valances were constructed for the Kelleys' apartment by F.B.I. carpenters.

Mr. Ford added that he was "confused" at the same time because Mr. Carter also told reporters yesterday that he was uncertain whether he would retain Mr. Kelley at the F.B.I. should he win the election on Nov. 2.

"So I am confused on the one hand by his flip-flop on this issue," said the President, "and I am very disappointed at his lack of compassion on the other."

Mr. Ford's comments evidently had been planned in advance. Throughout the 20-minute meeting with reporters he chatted a copy of today's issue of The New York Times. At one point he noted a headline that alluded to the ambiguity of Mr. Carter's attitude toward Mr. Kelley.

Prompting by Nessen

The President also was prepared to comment on what he considered to be a disparity between campaign statements by Mr. Carter and his running mate, Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota. Shortly before the news conference, Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary, prompted several reporters to ask Mr. Ford about his decision to eschew extensive political travels and to concentrate instead on what aides have called "high-visibility Presidential" activities in the White House.

When none of the reporters had done so toward the end of the session, Mr. Ford took advantage of a related question to give the prepared reply. Asked about Mr. Carter's characterization of him as a "timid" leader and "a captain hiding in a stateroom," Mr. Ford replied:

"That brings up an interesting point. I understand that yesterday Senator Mondale was complaining because I was not campaigning enough, and on Aug. 4 of 1976 Governor Carter was complaining because I was campaigning too much. I wish they would get their act together."

Immediately after the news conference, White House aides distributed mimeographed copies of reports describing the critiques of Mr. Carter and Mr. Mondale.

The White House suggestions of indecision and equivocation by the Democratic ticket were in furtherance of a campaign strategy by which Mr. Ford hopes to persuade voters that he is more experienced and dependable than his opponent. But President Ford appeared to be somewhat ambiguous in his treatment of the abortion issue today.

Asked whether he and Mr. Carter were in agreement on the matter, Mr. Ford replied forcefully that the two major party platforms were "quite different" on abortion, that both candidates had embraced their respective platforms and that, "My position is that of the Republican platform and I will stick with it."

Meeting with Bishops Friday

The Republican plank on abortion, after alluding to "sincere convictions" on both sides, calls for support of "the efforts of those who seek enactment of a Constitutional amendment to restore protection of the right to life for unborn children."

Mr. Ford, whose political strategists have said is hinging his campaign on substantial support of Roman Catholic voters and who will meet Friday with a group of Catholic bishops, was reminded that he had not previously endorsed the so-called "right to life" amendment that would ban abortions.

The President said again that "the Republican platform is my platform" and that it "coincides with my long-held Jimmy Carter addressing final British convention in Washington yesterday.

Church. Each day there has also been a large outdoor rally of the formal, traditional kind, as in Mellon Square in downtown Pittsburgh where Mr. Carter drew a large and closely packed audience that he did not stir to fervent applause.

The only real surprises seemed to be the unpleasant ones, such as confrontations with angry anti-abortion groups, who seem to have carefully organized and staged a noisy protest at Scranton last night in which Mr. Carter was hustled away by Secret Service agents from a pushing and unfriendly crowd.

A Partisan Condemnation

Today's speech here was, in large part, a strongly partisan condemnation of the Ford Administration in which Mr. Carter questioned whether "our highest officials have not been too pragmatic, even cynical."

The United States, he said, could not expect to impose its own standards of constitutional democracy on other nations "but we cannot look away when a government tortures people, or fails them for their beliefs or denies minorities fair treatment or the right to emigrate."

However, he said that there were "effective ways in which our power can be used to alleviate human suffering around the world."

Accuses U. S. on Boycott

Mr. Carter asserted the Government had "in effect condoned" efforts by the Arab states to restrict trade by American corporations with Israel through boycotts, threats, and said that if he was elected, "all laws" meant to discourage compliance with the boycotts "will be vigorously enforced."

He later said, through a spokesman, that he specifically favored legislation pending in Congress that would deny some income tax benefits to companies that comply with the Arab boycott.

Mr. Carter said some regimes, such as South Korea and Chile, "openly violate human rights" and that the United States should not "condone repression" but should use "our tremendous influence to increase freedom, particularly in those countries that depend on us for their very survival."

He asserted that the Ford Administration "had failed to make serious efforts" to persuade the Soviet Union to permit more free emigration to Israel and other states and he asserted that the Administration "had looked away" when Soviet pledges to permit greater freedom for its

First Carter-Ford Debate Is Set For Old Theater in Philadelphia

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8—The first campaign debate between President Ford and Jimmy Carter will be held in a historic 167-year-old theater in Philadelphia the night of Sept. 23, unless the courts intervene.

The League of Women Voters, which is sponsoring the debates, announced today the site of the first debate and more details on the format to which representatives of both the Democratic and Republican Presidential candidates had agreed.

But, almost simultaneously, the candidates of one of the minority political parties, which have been excluded from participation in the debates, filed suit in Federal District Court to block them, contending that limiting participation to the two major parties violated the communications and election laws.

Today's lawsuit came from the American Party, a conservative splinter group. Additional suits are expected within the next few days from other Presidential candidates—Eugene J. McCarthy, an independent; Lester G. Maddox of the American Independent Party, and Peter Camejo of the Socialist Workers Party, a Trotskyite group.

1,000 Are Invited

According to the sponsors, the first of three debates between President Ford and Mr. Carter—there will be a fourth at the Vice-Presidential level between Senators Walter F. Mondale and Robert J. Dole—will be held at 9:30 P.M. on Thursday, Sept. 23, in the Walnut Street Theater in Philadelphia.

An audience of just over 1,000 has been invited by the League of Women Voters to observe the event. The three major television networks, plus the Public Broadcasting Service, will offer live coverage, as will the Mutual Broadcasting System and the National Public Radio.

Three journalists to be chosen by six officials of the league will ask questions of the two candidates. Under the format approved for the first session, but not approved for subsequent ones, each candidate will have up to three minutes for an answer, the reporters will have an opportunity for a follow-up question with a two-minute answer and the opposing candidate will then have two minutes to comment.

Neither the President nor Mr. Carter will make opening statements, but each will be allowed a closing statement of up to three minutes.

Under the format approved by representatives of both candidates, neither President nor Mr. Carter will be asked to take a script or prepared notes in the theater. Each, however, will be asked to take notes during the debate and to them subsequently.

This attempt to insure a spontaneous demonstration of information and opinion will parallel, to some extent, rules of the British House of Commons where no statement in debate is based on a prepared text and such activity produces shouts of "reading" from the opposition benches.

President Ford said at a news conference today that he planned to do a deal of study and preparation for Sept. 23 debates. He denied, however, he planned to rehearse, with a House aide playing the role of Mr. Carter, before the first debate.

Mr. Ford told reporters that he had preferred an earlier date for his first debate, but that there was "no argument" over Philadelphia's site.

The Walnut Street Theater, near Independence Hall, is said to be the theater in continuous use in the speaking world. It was opened in 1808, in the second year of Jefferson. It was designated as a historic landmark in 1964.

Violations Are Alleged
The Socialist Workers Party plans to file suit early next week to prohibit the debates, announced in New York today. It would organize a picket line around the theater on Sept. 23 to protest the exclusion of candidates. Other minority candidates and their supporters will be invited to participate in the demonstrations.

Plans for the demonstration are to be a tacit concession that no lawsuits filed or planned will be an injunction against the debates two weeks left for legal action.

The American Party suit, announced this morning by the party's two spokesmen, Tom Anderson and Rufus S. Ford, is based on alleged violations of the communications law's requirement for "equal time" for political candidates and the campaign law's prohibition against private contributions to political candidates in the general election.

Gulf Lobbyist Said to Have Aided Many Congress Drives in 15 Years

By ERNEST HOLSENDOERF
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9—Claude C. Wild Jr., according to a witness who testified in a suit against him, once told Watergate prosecutors that all of the Senators on the Watergate Committee "except for Sam Ervin" had taken money from Gulf.

Mr. Wild, as the Washington lobbyist for Gulf, is said to have aided Congressional campaigns regularly for the Pittsburgh-based petroleum concern.

It is estimated that in nearly 15 years, he distributed about $4 million to campaigns, with some of the money coming from a "good government fund" managed by Gulf executives, and some channeled through the Bahamas subsidiary of the company.

While most of the money went to benefit Washington-based politicians, Mr. Wild had a habit of putting some money in envelopes and mailing it to his subordinates in various states to be distributed in local campaigns, according to an anecdote recounted by Fortune magazine in June.

Gifts to Dole, Heinz, Nixon

Asked about the safety of the procedure, he replied: "Don't you trust the U.S. Mail?"

Mr. Wild has told The New York Times about a gift to Senator Robert J. Dole—although today he recanted on his statements about a $2,000 donation in 1970 to Senator Dole—and he has also talked about a gift to Representative John H. Heinz, Republican of Pittsburgh.

He has been suspended from the practice of law here for a year for an acknowledged illegal gift to the 1972 campaign of President Richard M. Nixon.

Mr. Wild, who has spent most of his professional career in the oil business, was born in Austin, Tex., on Aug. 9, 1923. After receiving a business administration that he left the $2,000 lawful cash in a safety deposit box with Gulf corporate funds that had been "laundered" through the Bahamas until March 28, 1972, when he combined it with $500 of those laundered funds and delivered the money to Senator Howard H. Baker Jr., Republican of Tennessee.

A group of lawyers who investigated Gulf, headed by John McCloy, publicly advised Senator Baker last year that they believed the $2,500 was an illegal corporate contribution, and Senator Baker returned the money.

Mr. Wild said he made his "mistake" about giving the money to Senator Dole because he was "questioned unexpectedly, and before I had time to review my records of something that allegedly happened six years earlier. After looking at the records and materials I have, I am confident I have been in error and consequently have done a serious disservice to Senator Dole."

Testimony Unmentioned

On Monday, Mr. Wild made detailed statements to the National Broadcasting Company, the American Broadcasting Company and The New York Times about giving the money to Mr. Dole.

He said that at that time he had a letter to support his contention the money had gone to Mr. Dole.

Mr. Wild said today that he had been unable to locate the letter because his files were scattered in Gulf Oil's offices at the Watergate special prosecutor's office or at the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Doctors Considering Strike

A lawyer representing 200 doctors, dentists and psychiatrists employed by the state said yesterday the group would decide next week whether to strike to protest working conditions. The lawyer, Emil Oxford of Newark, said mental patients were being released from state institutions when "in no medical shape to deal with their own problems." He said they presented a "real danger to the community."

Carter's Wife Says His Attitude Toward Abortion Won't Change

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 8 (UPI)—Jimmy Carter's wife said today that her husband was not likely to change his position on abortion.

His stand on that issue has not changed since the days when he was Governor of Georgia, Rosalynn Carter said, adding that Mr. Carter personally opposed abortion but did not want it made illegal.

Mrs. Carter was asked in view of his encounter in Pennsylvania yesterday with demonstrators against abortion. About 500 people were on hand today as Mrs. Carter went for a stroll around Monument Circle in downtown Indianapolis.

On arrival here yesterday, she said at a news conference that President Ford has an advantage over her husband in their forthcoming debates but that the President "will be surprised at what Jimmy knows."

British Animal Lovers Admit Attack

LONDON, Sept. 8 (Reuters)—A group calling itself the Animal Liberation Front took responsibility today for vandalism on a truck that the group said had been used to transport animals for live experiments. The vehicle, belonging to a firm of breeders in rural southeastern England, had its tires slashed, the windshield sprayed with black paint and the wiper blades torn off. Soil was poured into the gas tank. Several weeks ago, a similar caller took responsibility when the office of a Government adviser on animals was wrecked.

Arizona G.O.P. Picks Steiger, Slain Reporter's Friend, for Senate

PHOENIX, Sept. 8—Representative Sam Steiger defeated Representative John B. Conlan yesterday in a bitterly fought contest for the Republican nomination for the Senate.

The campaign between the two conservatives, which attracted national publicity, was marked by angry charges on the issue of religion. Mr. Conlan, an Evangelical Christian, had long urged those with similar beliefs to "come out of the pews and go to the polls." Mr. Steiger, who is Jewish, had reported that he had received anti-Semitic notes and phone calls.

Mr. Steiger's victory, by a margin of 10,000 votes out of 195,000 cast, was a victory as well for Arizona party regulars, including Senator Barry Goldwater, who, upset over the reported anti-Semitism, had broken with his previous practice to endorse Mr. Steiger. Mr. Conlan, who had his own corps of zealous volunteers, many of them from church groups, had called party leaders "the back-room boys."

The 47-year-old Representative Steiger had come from behind in the race after being hurt by damaging, erroneous connections suggested between him and the murder June 13 of Don Bolles, an investigative reporter for the Arizona Republic. Mr. Steiger, a friend of Mr. Bolles, with whom he had shared information on corruption, went to the police to offer help after the Arizona Republic reporter was fatally injured by an explosion in his car. Headlines in the Republic led some people to believe Mr. Steiger was a suspect, which he was not. Two weeks ago the Republic endorsed him over Mr. Conlan.

Steiger Facing Ex-Prosecutor

In the general election, Representative Steiger will face Dennis DeConcini, the former prosecutor for Pima County, covering the Tucson area. Mr. DeConcini, a member of a wealthy, powerful Democratic family, finished far ahead of two opponents in the Democratic primary. He and Mr. Steiger are seeking the seat of Senator Paul Fannin, who is retiring.

In Arizona Congressional primaries, both John Rhodes, the House minority leader, and Representative Morris K. Udall, a Presidential hopeful last spring, won easily.

As of noon today, Mr. Conlan had neither conceded defeat nor pledged support to Mr. Steiger. The nominee, a New York-born, self-styled cowboy who is perhaps the most colorful of Arizona's cast of Congressional characters, made no secret of his personal feud with Mr. Conlan. When someone compared his attack-style with Mr. Conlan's as "a meat-ax vs. a scalpel," Representative Steiger retorted that he saw his opponent as "more of a Roto-Rooter."

That was often the level of the Republican primary campaign. Last night, Representative Steiger indicated he wanted to fight the general election on a much more impersonal, ideological battleground. "He's an able guy," he said of Mr. DeConcini; "he just happens to be wrong on the issues."

For his part, Mr. DeConcini noted not long ago that he expected his traditional Democratic credentials to be the target of either Republican. "I'm vulnerable on a number of issues," he said. "After all, I'm a member of the N.A.A.C.P. and the Representative Steiger is disliked intensely by environmental groups because of his opposition to strip-mining bills and his financial support from coal companies. He has served in the House for 10 years. In 1974, he received a rating of 100 percent from the Americans for Constitutional Action and a zero rating from Americans for Democratic Action.

Family Name Helped Democrat

Mr. DeConcini, at 39 the youngest of all the contestants, apparently benefited from his name and from a campaign, taking up nearly a year, in which he rallied the support of most of the state's labor groups and organization Democrats. His main opponent was Carolyn Warner, the state Superintendent of Public Instruction. Wade Church, a former State Attorney General, ran third.

Mr. DeConcini's father is a former State Supreme Court judge, his mother is the current Democratic National Committee woman and his brother is executive assistant to Governor Raul H. Castro of Arizona.

Mr. DeConcini appeared more liberal than Mrs. Warner on a number of issues, including unemployment and decriminalization of marijuana. The consensus in political circles here is that he is a low-keyed campaigner who has neither Mrs. Warner's theatrical flair nor Mr. Steiger's quick sense of humor.

Although Democrats outnumber Republicans in Arizona, many of them are known as "pinto" Democrats—conservatively-minded people who often vote Republican despite their registration.

EX-AIDE OF OIL INDUSTRY AND WIFE DIE IN GARAGE

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 8 (UPI)—Felix Chappellet, former vice president of the Western Oil and Gas Association, and his wife, were found dead in their garage yesterday. The engines of two automobiles had been permitted to fill the garage with carbon monoxide.

Mr. and Mrs. Chappellet were 73 years old and in poor health. Mr. Chappellet was an executive with the General Petroleum Corporation for 30 years before joining the industry association. He retired in 1965.

His wife, Annabelle, was the daughter of George Ralphs, founder of the Ralphs supermarket chain. She married Mr. Chappellet after the death of her first husband, Percy Brookbank, with whom she lived for many years in Paris.

The police said the couple had discussed suicide with their lawyer and friends several times during the last year.

On Monday they rented a car, although they owned a Cadillac.

A gardener coming to work Tuesday on their 3½ acre estate in the wealthy Benedict canyon area found rags and papers stuffed in the garage doors to seal them.

Inside, he found the Chappellets, seated in their Cadillac, dead.

The engines of the rented car and their own auto had been allowed to run.

The police, called to the estate by Mr. Chappellet's lawyer, found written instructions on where to find the keys, how the estate is settled and instructions on the disposition of some possession not covered in their wills.

Senator Chiles Faces a Tight Contest in Florida

MIAMI, Sept. 8—A close race appears to be in prospect in Florida for the seat of Senator Lawton Chiles.

Senator Chiles, a Democrat, is to be opposed by John Grady, a physician from Belle Glade, who won the Republican nomination in yesterday's primary by decisively defeating two opponents.

Dr. Grady, a member of the National Board of Governors of the John Birch Society, ran for the Senate in 1974 as the candidate of the American Party, polling more than 15 percent of the vote. He became a Republican last May.

He is regarded as a good campaigner. His strongly rightist views and his anti-Washington platform could draw many conservative voters in November.

Senator Chiles, a middle-of-the-roader, is still regarded as the front-runner. He has challenged Dr. Grady to a statewide television debate.

Yesterday's election produced few surprises and one of the lowest turnouts in Florida's history, about 30 percent.

As expected, Representative Robert L. F. Sikes, a Democrat, was chosen by a large margin to his 19th consecutive two-year term. He will have no Republican opposition in November.

Voters in Mr. Sikes's district in north Florida disregarded his recent reprimand by the House, resulting from charges of conflict of interest and failure to disclose some of his stock holdings, and gave him about 75 percent of the vote.

The present makeup of the Florida Congressional delegation, 10 Democrats and five Republicans, is not expected to change.

Democrat Is Given Edge

Andrew Ireland, a banker from Winterhaven, who appears to have won the Democratic nomination in the Eighth District, where Representative James Haley is retiring after 24 years in the House, is given an edge over the Republican nominee, who will be chosen in a runoff on Sept. 28.

The only other possible upset could be in Fort Lauderdale, where Representative J. Herbert Burke, an incumbent Republican, faces a hard race against a Democratic nominee, who will also be determined on Sept. 28.

Mr. Burke, elected in 1974 with 51 percent of the vote, represents a district that has become more Democratic in the last two years.

In state races, Joseph W. Hatchet became the first black to be elected to the State Supreme Court.

The 43-year-old son of a migrant food picker roundly defeated a Dade County Circuit Court judge, Harvie S. DuVal, a descendant of a Florida pioneering family, in a bitter race in which friends of Judge DuVal attempted to introduce the race election.

The Democrats retain control of the State Legislature, although the final division of seats will not be known until November.

Here in Dade County, a number of well-known officeholders were not on the ballot, among them Richard E. Gerstein, the state attorney for the county, who won an unprecedented sixth consecutive four-year term without Democratic or Republican opposition.

But voters removed from office Harry P. Cain, an incumbent commissioner who was a former United States Senator from Washington. He was defeated by William G. Oliver, a labor leader.

P.S.C. Commissioner Chosen

FARGO, N.D., Sept. 8 (AP)—North Dakota voters yesterday selected Richard Elkin, president of the Public Service Commission, to face the incumbent Democrat, Gov. Arthur A. Link, in this fall's gubernatorial election.

Mr. Elkin, 43 years old, outpolled his challenger, Herb Geving of Parshall, nearly 4 to 1 in the Republican primary.

In the only other contested primary in the state, Lloyd Omdahl of Grand Forks, overwhelmed Torfin Teigen of Fargo in a race for nomination to a seat in the United States House of Representatives.

Mr. Omdahl, a former state budget director, had 31,545 votes with 1,116 precincts reporting, while Mr. Teigen had 4,896.

Mr. Elkin, 43, got 36,374 votes, with 1,105 of 1,607 precincts counted, while Mr. Geving, 42, had 8,324.

Atom Protesters Sentenced

EXETER, N.H., Sept. 8 (AP)—Eleven people were handed three-month jail sentences for contempt today for violating a court order not to enter the construction site of the Seabrook nuclear power plant. The week-long contempt trial ended with Superior Court Judge Maurice Bois of Rockingham County telling the defendants they had "attacked the integrity of the whole judicial system" and were going to suffer the consequences.

Several anti-nuclear power groups have been vigorously fighting construction of the $1.6 billion nuclear generating plant.

City U. Enrollment Declines 17% As Free-Tuition Policy Is Ended

By EDWARD B. FISKE

The City University will begin its first academic year as a tuition-charging institution today with an estimated 32,294 fewer students than last year, a drop of 17 percent.

However, the opening of classes—scheduled in the various units over the next two weeks—will take place in a climate of unusual financial stability, at least for the moment. For the first time since 1973, when the university began to experience a series of severe budget cuts, officials of the 19 units of the university know how much money they will have to spend.

"The university has been chopped up, but at least this was done before the start of the year," said Dr. Robert J. Kibbee, the chancellor. "The faculty members who are here now know that they will be here at the end of the year. This will be a big plus for morale."

Future Is Uncertain

However, the short-term stability contrasts markedly with the uncertainty that persists over the long-term support of the system's nine senior colleges. Mayor Beame has announced that the city will no longer support them after this year, and Governor Carey, while accepting the principle of state support, wants to phase this in over a three-year period.

"This will be the big issue this year," said Dr. Kibbee. "We plan a major effort to get the city to change its mind." Figures released by the chancellor yesterday showed that, in comparison with last September, the university will be operating on a considerably reduced scale.

Despite the influx of $65.2 million in new undergraduate tuition income, a result of the decision in June to end the traditional policy of free tuition, the overall budget will be down nearly 6 percent, from $498.6 to $470.0 million.

The 17 percent decline in full-time and part-time undergraduate enrollment is in accordance with long-term plans to reduce the size of the student body. There were 187,334 students last September and 155,040 this term.

Enrollment at Hunter

Initial indications are that the various institutions are meeting their enrollment expectations, thus assuring that they will be able to raise the full amount of revenue anticipated from tuition.

Jacqueline G. Wexler, the president of Hunter College, which begins classes today, said that the number of students registered thus far—19,000—was about what was expected, but that they were signing up for about 5 percent fewer courses than expected.

"The inference would seem to be that students are having to work more hours to stay in school," she said.

To assist middle-income students whose family income is above the cutoff point for state tuition assistance, Hunter has established a special scholarship fund, backed by alumni, that totals $110,000 for the current semester. "This should meet about one-third of their financial needs," said Mrs. Wexler.

La Guardia Community College, the only other unit to have completed registration, reported that its enrollment, about 4,700 students, had held steady, with a slightly larger freshman class and somewhat more upperclass dropouts than usual. Joseph Shenker, the president, said he did not expect La Guardia to experience any adverse effects from tuition because "our program is one of cooperative education that gives students the chance to work as well as to study."

Medgar Evers Community College will begin classes tomorrow, and Bronx and Queensborough Community colleges will open Saturday. The other institutions will begin on different dates through Sept. 23.

Fewer Courses

The start of registration at City College was delayed for more than four hours yesterday when about 30 demonstrators took over Mahoney Gymnasium, where the registration was being conducted, to protest the imposition of tuition. Five members of a group called Black Economic Survival were arrested for trespassing, and college officials indicated that they expected disruptions to continue for the next few days.

Figures from the chancellor's office also showed that the faculty and staff of the university had dropped by a total of 28 percent since last September, from 17,622 to 12,700. This includes a reduction of 1,842 full-time teachers, a 19 percent decline.

Numerous people involved in the university have expressed fears that these cuts have deeply affected the academic quality of the institutions. Dr. Kibbee acknowledged that students this year would face larger classes and "a diminution in the number of courses offered." He also said that there would be sharp cutbacks in "supportive services," such as counseling and tutoring.

School Supervisors Avert Layoff By Giving Up Cost-of-Living Ra

By LEONARD BUDDER

The announced layoff of 308 New York City school supervisors has been averted, at least for the present, as the result of the Board of Education's acceptance of an offer by the supervisors' union to exchange salary adjustments for jobs.

Under the arrangement, the 4,000 members of the Council of Supervisors and Administrators will give up this year's scheduled cost-of-living raise, which was expected to amount to $320 each, to save the jobs of their colleagues.

Normal Retirement

Confirmation of the arrangement, which will mean the immediate cancellation of layoff notices recently sent out, came from the Board of Education and Peter S. O'Brien, the president of the union, which represents the city's 1,000 principals and 3,000 other supervisors. About two-thirds of those whose jobs were saved are assistant principals in elementary and junior high schools; most of them earn about $25,000 a year.

A key factor in the arrangement was the willingness of the school system's decentralized local boards to also give up money they save through the non-retirement of supervisors this fall—200 are expected to leave soon—before supervisory layoffs. This will be indicated Tuesday night at a meeting of local representatives and central board officials.

Grim Future Is Seen

Even as School Chancellor Irving G. Saypol was expressing gratitude to the members of the supervisors' union for making sacrifices, Dr. Robert J. Christ, president of the Board of Education, called on the United Federation of Teachers to do likewise.

About 3,500 city teachers are set to be laid off when the fall term under way Monday because of the union's predicament. The U.F.T. has been under pressure from the State Education Financial Control Board, which last year, to give up some of unrecouped benefits in exchange for jobs. But the union has shown little interest in doing so.

Meanwhile, Mr. Anker told those who reported for work yesterday that the school system faced a grim future. Speaking over the Board of Education and television stations, Mr. Anker said that the current school year was "more than a quarter billion of our basic needs" and that "even of the education process has weighed and measured; trimmed a tailed, and in too many instances mated entirely."

Mr. O'Brien, the head of the union, said that the arrangement involving the cost-of-living adjustment and the action by the local board provide enough funds to keep all 4,000 supervisors employed for the entire school year, the union also helps layoff of its members by giving of living money.

But Mr. O'Brien said the situation he "reassured" in February. A spokesman said that the central board had not mitted itself to keeping the support for as long as the money last year approval of the arrangement quired by both the Board of Education and the membership of the union both sides said this was considerable.

Rev. Moon's Church Will Purchase Manhattan Center

By EDWARD HUDSON

The Unification Church, founded and headed by the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, yesterday announced the signing of an agreement to purchase the 70-year-old Manhattan Center, at 311 West 34th Street, just west of Eighth Avenue, for more than $2 million.

The eight-story building, which holds two ballrooms, one seating 3,000 people and the other 1,500, is adjacent to the former New Yorker Hotel, on Eighth Avenue at 34th Street, which was bought by the Unification Church in May for more than $5 million, for use as its World Mission Center.

First Purchased by Ballet

Calling the center a former opera house, the latest addition to an expanding mission-center complex, Neil A. Salonen, president of the Unification Church in America, said it would be used for "cultural and evangelistic programs." Many of the events would be open to the public, he said. In addition, he added that "the hall itself would be available for rental by appropriate groups."

In April 1975, the American Ballet Theater, which had been unable to find a home base in its 35 years of existence, disclosed that it had signed a contract to buy Manhattan Center for $3 million and planned to spend $7 million for renovation.

Mr. Salonen said that an agreement had been signed with the center's owner, Abraham Ellis, and the Ballet Theater Foundation, parent organization of the American Ballet, to assign the ballet's contract to the church. A spokesman for the Unification Church here, Susan Reinbold, said that the American Ballet was unable to raise funds to buy the building, which in recent decades has been the scene of many political and union meetings as well as commercial performances.

Accused of 'Brainwashing'

"American Ballet signed their contract over to us," the spokesman explained. The center is the latest property acquisition for the Unification Church, which has been involved in controversy as parents in various parts of the country have charged that the church led by the Korean evangelist has "brainwashed" their children into becoming adherents and into becoming hostile to the parents. The church has denied the charges.

Since 1973 the church, which claims to have 30,000 members in this country, has purchased large tracts in both Barrytown and Tarrytown, N.Y., a loft building in Long Island City, Queens, and the former Columbia University Club, at 4 West 43d Street, now a local church headquarters.

The Manhattan Center was originally opened as the Manhattan Opera House on Dec. 3, 1906, an idea of the late Oscar Hammerstein. The Manhattan Opera Company, which it housed, moved out in 1910. Touring opera companies played at the hall until it was sold in the late 1920's, to the Scottish Rite Temple, which owned it for several years. The last theatrical production there was "The Eternal Road," by Franz Werfel, produced by Max Reinhardt in 1937.

This week, The Hifi Show introduces yet another unique audio product - the ultra-refined Tandberg TR2055 receiver.

The basic concept behind the new Tandberg TR2055 stereo receiver is simple: create an all-in-one receiver that equals, or surpasses, the finest separate amplifiers, preamplifiers, and tuners available.

Power output is an ample 55 watts minimum RMS per channel into 8 ohms at any frequency within the 20 to 20,000 Hz. audible range, with no more than 0.15% total harmonic or intermodulation distortion. Additionally, the TR2055 features an excellent Damping Factor of 80 (8 ohms, 1Khz.) for improved transient performance with high performance loudspeakers.

The FM section approaches the state-of-the-art, with 1.7 uV usable IHF Sensitivity and an extraordinary Capture Ratio of 0.9 dB.

And tuning is accomplished electronically, so when you tune to a particular station, that's the station you hear — and beautifully!

The control flexibility is unsurpassed, with two tape monitor circuits (with front-panel dubbing in either direction); inputs for two turntables (one input has adjustable sensitivity); high and low filters; a frequency/loudness compensated volume control; ultra-precise bass and treble adjustments; and much more.

Come in to Tech Hifi today for a personal demonstration of this unique audio product. Or any other product from our excellent selection of receivers, tuners, amplifiers, loudspeakers, turntables, tape decks, and accessories. Every major brand is represented!

Only Tech Hifi brings together such an exciting array of quality components.

ADDELPHI'S TEACHERS WALK OUT OVER PACT

Months of Negotiations End in Strike as University Opens Term—Some Classes Held

By ROY R. SILVER
ADDELPHI, N.Y., Sept. 8—The Adelphi University went on its morning after five months of negotiations failed to achieve a new contract, the first in the history of the 100-year-old university, came on the day of classes and left 11,000 and part-time students without classes. Many students expressed the impasse.

Students, who first learned of the impasse from the 283 members of the local American Association of University Professors when they went to work this morning, milled about the bright sunshine while waiting for news about the continuing negotiations. A senior from Glen Cove expressed the sentiments of the students when he said: "It is terrible. You are paying for this school.

The student is the loser."

The most expensive school in the area, Adelphi, has a 100 percent backlash from the students. University teachers have justified the results, but the school is hurting.

The negotiations, which were held last week by a vote of 157 to 13 contract were not achieved, and last night and voiced confidence negotiating team.

Faculty members picketing yesterday at Adelphi University, on the first day of classes of the fall semester.

the university, said today that the main issue concerned salaries. He said the present average salary of the teaching staff was about $18,000 plus, "with a range running from upward of $12,000 for instructors to $30,000 for full professors."

Dr. Costello said that "a few classes" were being held today, but did not say how many. He said the university had had a deficit in the last academic year of about $500,000.

The last offer made public by the university was a 5.5 percent across-the-board increase in the first year of a two-year contract and cost-of-living increases aimed ranging from 4 percent to 7.5 percent in the second year.

Teachers, Rebuffed on Pay-Rise Demands, Strike in Buffalo, Bayonne and Jersey City

By MURRAY ILLSON
Relations Board, said financial problems figured strongly in negotiations throughout the state, with more than 225 districts operating without contracts.

In Buffalo, school attendance was cut in half on the first day of classes as teachers picketed that city's 101 public schools. A spokesman for the striking Buffalo Teachers Federation estimated that 95 percent of the city's 3,500 teachers did not show up for classes.

Half of the school system's 56,879 children reported for classes, it was said, but they were dismissed by 11:30 A.M.
Buffalo's fiscal problems were said to be hampering negotiations between the school board and the teachers. The union said it might be willing to trim its wage demands, but the board wants to impose a freeze on salaries.

Harold R. Newman, director of conciliation for the state's Public Employment

Relations Board, said financial problems
figured strongly in negotiations throughout the state, with more than 225 districts
operating without contracts.

Mr. Newman said potential strike situations on Long Island had been "defused" in all-night negotiations between teachers and officials in the school systems of Northport, Lindenhurst, East Meadow and Coneywogue-Brookhaven.

"Memorandums of agreement," he said,
"are being drawn up now for each of them. We believe they will be ratified."
In Jersey City, teachers joined clerical employees on picket lines to block the scheduled opening of schools for 38,000 pupils. Only 78 of the city's 2,000 teachers reported for classes, it was said. And in neighboring Bayonne, a dispute over salaries brought a teachers' strike there.
Pupil attendance there was said to be slightly better than 50 percent.

Hatshepsut, Etc.

By ANATOLE BROUARD

A SEA CHANGE. By Lois Gould. 162 pages. Simon & Schuster, $2.95.
 When a highly intelligent and talented woman writes a preposterous novel, we can only suppose that she is in the grip of a crippling idea. The idea in "A Sea Change" seems to be an eccentric offshoot of what is now called the sexual revolution. But while this movement has produced some brilliant books by women, Lois Gould's fourth novel is one of its casualties. No revolution is complete without its bad books.

Jessie, the heroine—or hero—of "A Sea Change," is a former model. This is to say, in the naked symbolism of the book, that she uses to lend the authority of her personal beauty to the existing social order, to clothes and perfume, the outer trappings of a parasitic and superficial femininity. Married to Roy, a male chauvinist, Jessie abruptly discovers that she hates him. She hates herself, too—that self which she has done nothing to shape, which passively developed in response to bourgeois pressures. She decides to change, and nothing less than "a sea change" will do. Inside of every heroine, she would have us believe, there is a hero struggling to get out.

The trigger for this change of Jessie's is B.G., her affectionate designation for the "black gunman" who invaded her apartment and, in the same night's work, is her sexuality and her soul. When B.G. makes love to Jessie with his gun, she begins to understand the true nature of the male and female roles. And the readers of "A Sea Change" begin to understand what they are in for. The literalness of this scene leads to a pornography of symbolism as well of sexuality. In a grotesque oversimplification of the already oversimplified popular view of Freud, Jessie equates B.G.'s gun with madness and power. She then decides to model herself, so to speak, after a pistol.

From Guns to a Hurricane
 It would be comforting to believe that Mrs. Gould is putting us on, but there is no evidence of it. "A Sea Change" is stalerly serious. In fact, it gets steadily worse as it goes along. While we are still shaking our heads over the gun image, Jessie enlists a hurricane to further her definition of male and female. The storm of protest that characterizes the more vociferous side of the sexual revolution has at least found its objective correlative.

The program music for these developments is the hurricane that rages over the island. Her eyes glowing with indignation, Jessie treats us to a dissertation on the femininity of hurricanes. What is a woman but a turbulence of emotion, wasting herself in futile and destructive rage? She thrills with outraged modesty at the thought of the "hurricane hunters," men with inhuman instruments which they use to "rape" the storm, to "control" it and render it "harmless." The author who in her earlier books demonstrated a fine, ironic-laconic style, indulges herself here in a hurricane of rhetoric and imagery.

Contraptional Daughters
 Jessie has two daughters, or two symbols, two contraptional devices, who are busy all this while working out youthful variations of her theme. Robin, in playing with her dolls, eliminates all male figures and concentrates on the heroines of history, finally arriving at Queen Hatshepsut, who called herself "king" in ancient Egypt. Diane lifts weights to prepare for her dimly sensed approaching ordeal. Onanism, supplying her own male principle, is another tribute to her mother.

Behind all this, like a bass obbligato, lurks B.G., crooning over his gun, measuring Jessie's old self so that the new one can be born. He has become a part of Jessie, her revolutionary persona. His power, we are told, is "stronger than loving." Jessie begins to speak black English.

This fourth book is indeed a sea change from Mrs. Gould's previous novels. It reads as if she had written it with a gun at her own head. It is hurried and halfhearted, attempting to cover up its perturbation with stridency. It is hard to explain, too, coming as it does from an author who is, in her other books, so ironic, so cruelly amused by other people's clumsiness. Perhaps, "A Sea Change" represents the interlude of clumsiness that often accompanies the transition from one novelistic stance to another. Mrs. Gould may feel that she has exhausted the resources of ironic detachment. The desire to write a "symbolic" novel may be like the desire to experiment with unconventional sex—an irresistible temptation for certain temperaments. It is a pity that both of these desires generally make for poor reading.

The Defense Issue . . .

President Ford's attack on "the voices of retreat" that urge the United States to reduce defense spending and "to withdraw" American troops from overseas appears to be an attempt to pin an anti-defense label on Jimmy Carter—a label that is not justified by the Democratic candidate's stated positions. But Mr. Ford's evident belief that he could force the issue into such black-and-white terms may explain his early emphasis on defense and his earlier, unsuccessful proposal that national security affairs be the first subject for the projected Ford-Carter debates.

The country undoubtedly is in a mood supportive of a strong defense stance, as indicated by Congressional refusal this year, for the first time in this decade, to make significant cuts in the Administration's military budget despite a $14 billion increase. As for troops overseas, after years of steadily growing support for Senator Mansfield's proposals for cutbacks everywhere, especially in Europe, the certainty of overwhelming defeat kept the Senate majority leader from even introducing his resolution this year.

Against this background, Mr. Carter's efforts to differentiate his position from the Administration's posture on defense spending and overseas deployments understandably have been quite limited, except perhaps on one issue—Korea. On defense spending, Mr. Carter has not favored a cutback, but a smaller increase than the Administration. His support for a strong American contribution to conventional defenses in West Europe—in part to put less reliance on tactical nuclear weapons—has been consistent.

In favoring reductions in Europe if mutual cutbacks can be arranged with the Soviet Union—or if new NATO weapons can substitute for some manpower without cutting strength—Mr. Carter's position varies little, if at all, from the Ford Administration's. Where he may part company with the Administration to some extent, apart from Korea, is in his feeling that there might be some reductions in American forces in the Western Pacific generally and some shift toward NATO.

On Korea, there is a significant difference. Even after the recent incident that claimed two American lives, Mr. Carter has continued to voice a hope that American ground forces could be withdrawn in two or three years. But he has hedged by emphasizing prior talks—and presumably agreement—with the South Korean and Japanese Governments. He has also proposed a prior agreement with the Soviet Union to assure the security of South Korea—not a very fruitful proposition since China, not Russia, is North Korea's sponsor, former cobelligerent and current backer in the four-power Panmunjom armistice arrangements.

. . . and Arms Control

Apart from Korea, two other significant national security issues have been posed by Mr. Carter—without as yet a direct response from Mr. Ford. One is his opposition to the Ford Administration's large-scale arms sales to third-world countries, particularly Iran and Saudi Arabia. Even more important is his disagreement with Administration weapons programs preparing a counterforce capability for limited strategic nuclear war, a major departure from the earlier American strategy of deterrence. Mr. Carter has also urged a far more vigorous anti-proliferation policy than has been pursued until recently by the Ford Administration. But the differences here are being blurred now by a shift in Washington toward the Carter viewpoint.

There are ambiguities and gaps in Mr. Carter's defense posture, and there are issues on which he has stated frankly that he has not yet made up his mind, such as the B-1 bomber and the cruise missile. But he agrees with the President and Secretary Kissinger on the existence of "rough equivalence" with the Soviet Union in strategic forces and the need for a strategic arms

Monetary Politics

The recent turbulence in Europe's money markets, which undoubtedly has abated only temporarily, reflects the strain between economic reality and political aims.

The economic reality is that West Germany has reduced its inflation rate to between one-half and one-third of that of its Common Market partners. But the adjustment in currency exchange rates this would normally produce in the present floating world monetary system—upvaluing the mark or devaluing other currencies, or both—has encountered two political obstacles.

The Common Market goal of political union—to be achieved through increasing economic and monetary unity and, ultimately, a common currency—has led to the "snake" system of closely tied exchange rates. This joint float, as the West German mark has firmed upward, has prevented the Dutch, Belgian, Luxembourg, Danish and Swedish currencies from dropping enough to compensate for higher production costs and export prices.

France was forced to withdraw from the system in March but Belgium and Holland so far have eased the strain on their reserves and their currency rates, which have dropped to the permitted floor, by raising interest rates. That brings in money from abroad and helps finance trade deficits. But it also inhibits recovery at a time when unemployment remains high.

The second political obstacle to a currency realignment is West Germany's October election. Revaluation upward of the undervalued German mark would solve everyone else's problems. But it might hamper West German exports and lose votes for Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

Currency traders, money managers and speculators, however, respond to economics, not politics. They limitation treaty (SALT II) to codify that balance as a start toward reductions.

Overall, both major Presidential candidates would appear to be well within the mainstream of American defense thinking. The issues that already have emerged and other realistic options can be usefully debated and may help to educate the country about future choices. But Mr. Ford's initial effort suggests a belief that he can evoke the kind of dramatic contrast that in reality does not seem to exist and is therefore likely to confuse rather than inform the country on this crucial topic.

A Bad Nomination

The Senate Judiciary Committee is considering the nomination of Federal District Judge Harry W. Wellford to the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. The nomination has raised much opposition, as well it should. Judge Wellford has been on the bench since 1971, and his record raises serious questions about his fitness for higher judicial office.

The hallmark of the nominee's judicial career is strong and unremitting hostility to the constitutional and statutory claims by minorities for equal justice. He has resisted minority claims under Federal statutes to equal employment opportunities, going so far on occasion as to require the plaintiffs to meet requirements that the statutes and the courts have explicitly invalidated. His position on school desegregation is no better.

Judge Wellford's judicial record is studded with reversals. That seems not to bother him since he has been quoted in a Memphis newspaper as saying, "I know they're going to reverse me, but let them. I'm going to rule this way anyway because I think it is right." Such a view misses the appropriate judicial attitude by a wide margin. The Judiciary Committee should reject this nomination.

Reason on Puerto Rico

For the second straight year, common sense eventually prevailed in the United Nations Decolonization Committee's wholly unwarranted deliberations about the political status of Puerto Rico. Last year it required a formal vote of 11 to 9 to shelve a fatuous Cuban resolution that would have reaffirmed "the inalienable right of the people of Puerto Rico to self-determination and independence." This year, the committee simply decided without a vote to postpone the issue until next year.

Pertains the basic facts about Puerto Rico—that voters there freely exercise their rights of self-determination in regular elections and that only a handful vote for independence—are at last being recognized by some of the genuinely nonaligned members of the U.N. committee. It may be that more delegates now see this annual charade for what it is: a cynical ploy by Fidel Castro to embarrass the United States at Turtle Bay and to stir up trouble for the Government of Puerto Rico at home and in the Caribbean.

Certainly the open attitude of Gov. Rafael Hernández Colón—denying any U.N. jurisdiction over Puerto Rico but inviting any member government to send representatives to the Commonwealth to see the situation firsthand—has had some impact. So did this year's quiet effort by Ambassador William W. Scranton and his staff, which left no doubt about the seriousness with which the United States viewed this unwarranted interference but eschewed threats and pressures.

Cuba's vitriolic Ricardo Alarcon Quesada may have learned something from this exercise in hypocrisy. Clearly he lacked the votes for adoption of any resolution that presumed to prescribe for Puerto Rico's three million residents something they regularly reject at the polls. If Puerto Rico ever opts for independence, the President of the United States would be bound to recommend that Congress promptly grant it. Henry Cabot Lodge made that pledge in behalf of President Eisenhower 23 years ago; it remains as valid today as when it was given.

expected upvaluation and bought marks. They can resume buying at any time.

Meanwhile, the world monetary problem created by the five-fold rise in oil prices since 1973 is beginning to emerge again in sharper form as recovery lifts the oil import bills and trade deficits of the industrial nations.

The petrodollar surpluses of the OPEC nations are deposited mainly in the strong currency countries—West Germany, Switzerland, the United States and Japan—increasing the strain on the other industrial nations. Japan, under American pressure, has permitted its undervalued yen to float upward somewhat, but probably not enough to reduce significantly its huge trade surpluses.

The hope that adjustments of this kind would take place automatically in a world of floating currencies has long since been overtaken by the political reality that virtually all governments manage their floats, some more than others.

Within the Common Market, the effort to achieve a common currency—as the route to economic and political union—clearly has put the cart before the horse. It is evident that harmonization of economic policies and inflation rates and, probably, considerable progress toward political union will have to come first.

Similarly, in the wider world, whether exchange rates are fixed and change from time to time or, as now, are floating continuously, it is clear that they are often politically managed. If competitive devaluations and monetary turmoil are to be avoided, national management will have to give way to a more effective and institutionalized form of political-cooperation in monetary affairs.

U.S. Defense: The 'Precarious Perch'

To the Editor:

The ongoing debate about Soviet military might becomes one where the individual must choose between those who proffer the view that America is losing its grip (if it has not done so already) or the more palatable view that we are all overreacting to the frightening polemics of Pentagon rhetoric.

I fear that the latter view is gaining in popularity, particularly in those critical areas which affect the decision-making process: Congress and the news media. The Strangelovian mystique of martinet in uniform pushing buttons and basking in the glory of newer weapons tends to obfuscate the issues. This is probably the crudest irony simply because it is the soldier-who, when war comes, must leave his family, possibly never to return.

What are those issues which balance the U.S. on a precarious perch? Erudite men and scholarly groups in the field are sounding the tocsin which signals a concerted drive by the U.S.S.R. to gain nuclear superiority over the U.S. Its goal? To wage a nuclear war and win it while securing the foundations of society. The following points simply cannot be overlooked:

- The U.S.S.R. is driving for decisive strategic superiority over the U.S. (not parity) despite any agreements reached via détente or SALT I.
- An unprecedented deployment of new, powerful Soviet missiles is damaging the basic objectives of SALT (this increased throw-weight is particularly significant as the Soviets deploy their MIRV's). They will soon possess a knockout punch against our vaunted Minuteman force.
- Civil Defense (derided by Representative Downey) is receiving incredible emphasis in the Soviet Union. The aim: fighting and winning a nuclear war—not deterring it.

Lord Chalfont, a prominent British defense expert, puts it this way:

"The nuclear balance ceases to exist at the moment when one side believes that it has acquired the capacity to deliver an effective nuclear attack upon the other and survive the ensuing retaliation. My proposition is that the Soviet Union is resolved to acquire that capacity in the very near future."

This, too, is my proposition. My fears are exacerbated by just how near that future is and the current direction of American defense objectives as perceived by those responsible agencies which ultimately will have the greatest effect on its outcome. In future high-risk security clashes with the Kremlin, will our fears of their nuclear potential cause us to "blink first"?

The Murderers

To the Editor:

I vehemently object to Dr. Schur's cavalier dismissal [letter Aug. 30] of Mrs. Cutler's letter concerning the murder of her son at the hands of vicious hoodlums. He states: " . . . Ms. Cutler does not seem to wonder why people commit these horrible acts. . . ." It is precisely questions of this type which are responsible for these "horrible acts." The question itself immediately shifts the responsibility from the perpetrator to "someone else." "Oh, society made me do it . . .," very much akin to " . . . the devil made me do it."

Not until each individual is held fully accountable for his actions can our society ever hope to extricate itself from the ever-deepening morass of lawlessness.

Key to City Survival

To the Editor:

Opposition to the new apartment buildings in New York City, such as the kind expressed over the proposed luxury condominium apartments at the Museum of Modern Art, is incomprehensible.

Privately developed new housing should be given the greatest encouragement at this juncture in the city's life. It would bolster the city's economy, provide badly needed jobs in the construction industry, encourage other developers to go back to their drawing boards, and offer a real housing alternative for those families considering a move out of New York City. New York cannot survive without a solid base of middle-income and upper-income residents. There has been little new, quality housing built recently to attract or keep these people here.

STEPHEN FISHER
New York, Aug. 25, 1976

The writer is president of the mortgage financing company that bears his name.

To Cut Electricity Costs

To the Editor:

Now that the city is going to purchase its power from the state instead of Con Edison, it should extend that arrangement to Mitchell-Lama housing. The city's 90 to 95 percent mortgage financing of Mitchell-Lama constitutes an effective equity position, as though it were the owner. Too, the savings realized by the projects may be earmarked, under appropriate procedures, for payment of mortgage arrears, presently large and growing. The state, of course, should implement the same scheme relative to state-financed Mitchell-Lama projects, such as Co-Op City.

Of Marxism and Academe

To the Editor:

It is dismaying to read Professor Aptheker (Op-Ed Aug. 27) landing science and critical inquiry while offering a series of shallow and outdated generalities about American higher education.

In fact, Marxian perspectives have become an integral part of many academic disciplines and are consequently taught today in all major universities. Far from systematically excluding the left, universities in the last decade have provided the most congenial home that American radicalism has found since World War II. This situation tends to support the thesis of another Marxist professor, who castigated the "repressive tolerance" of American society, far more than it does the specter of persecution suggested by Professor Aptheker.

The supposedly high standards Professor Aptheker has set for himself have not precluded some fatuous remarks. He has social science beginning its dialogue with Marx a century and a half ago when Karl was eight years old. To characterize science as "democratic" and "humanistic" is preposterous if these words are to retain their meaning. And, considering the relative proportions of Jews in the academic profession, the allegation of anti-Semitism in American universities is simply astonishing.

There is a deeper issue underlying Professor Aptheker's protestations. Since its inception the modern university has been pledged to the ideal of the objective and disinterested pursuit of knowledge. Although it is at present recognized by many that this ideal is unattainable in practice, it nevertheless serves as a kind of gyroscope to prevent scholarship from deviating too badly from the course of honest inquiry. The insights of Marx into the social process, when utilized in this spirit, have contributed greatly to American historical and sociological thought.

But Professor Aptheker is guided by a different gyroscope—one oriented toward the struggle against what he terms "monopoly capitalism and imperialism." This places special constraints upon his utilization of Marxian thought.

It is apparently this intellectual straitjacket that prevents him from discerning the tension between scholarship and partisanship; it also leads him to substitute ideological formulas for a critical examination of the complex reality of contemporary American higher education.

Moynihan and Blacks

To the Editor:

Why should a black vote for Moynihan? The primary fact about Pat Moynihan of interest to blacks is that he is not as bad as he is thought to be. On the whole, his record is respectable in that he dedicated most of a past decade of his life to what essentially black causes, perceived even as he was vilified.

A few examples should suffice to demonstrate a fact which is much noted or ignored: "Everyone has heard of and his opinion on the Moynihan report the Negro family, but almost no one has read it. If one did read it, it would make the surprising disclosure that years before affirmative action was ever heard of, Pat Moynihan was fighting to get the Federal Government to make a national commitment to deal with the problem of black families in 1965, about the problem the Rev. Jesse Jackson. His claim of the minuscule anti-poverty program is also being echoed currently.

Moynihan has worked to decade to reform the welfare system. It was he who got Richard Nixon to propose a guaranteed annual income. For some strange reason, it has been "capped" most people that the effect of the family assistance program would have been to double the income of rural blacks released them from the feudal control of Southern welfare administrators. One of the most important achievements of Moynihan's tenure at the White House was to aid in venting John Mitchell's Justice Department from dismantling the civil laws. In 1970, when the Voting Rights Act came up for renewal, Mitchell posed to end enforcement in the S. including the ban against literacy tests, and to impose literacy tests nationwide. Moynihan attacked the Act and it was ultimately dropped.

The most important character about Pat Moynihan is that his background is a lot like that of many folks. He came from a poor, feeble headed family and has succeeded through luck, assistance and work. He deserves to have his record examined without prejudice. If he does, he would surely receive a share of the vote of black people.
FRANKLIN D. R.
Seattle, Aug. 31,

Opportunist to the E

To the Editor:

The futur in the press over Representative Abzug's reluctance to port a Moynihan candidacy is a far cry. In fact, her view is held broad spectrum of New York Democrats who value their party's traditions and principles.

Moynihan's attempt to find an i under the rubric of "party loyalty" ironic in light of his long and dev service to the Nixon-Agnew-Ford administrations. Few senior officials named as loyal to Nixon as Moynihan; to this day, Moynihan not repudiated Nixon. Neither revelations from the Nixon tapes the evidence of C.I.A., F.B.I., White House lawlessness have elic his public dissent. Opportunist to end, Moynihan, who said he dep any use of the United Nations for mestic partisan purposes, now plots his U.N. photographs in campaign posters.

In Jimmy Carter's final term Governor of Georgia, he stated ically that he would not support Maddox for Governor even if Maddox the Democratic primary. Moynihan may not be as extreme Maddox, he offers a record of tion to Nixon policies, blended pronouncements which were and racially divisive.

In view of the outstanding alternatives available to New York Democrats—Bella Abzug, Paul O'D Ramsey Clark—it would be trag the primary did not yield a candidate to the party's basic principle SANDRA S. and VICTOR A. ED

How to Slow Prices

To the Editor:

A national "E" award for the Motor Co. for recognizing the guidelines in our economy for slow inflation and raising employment. The 3 percent wage offer, with a cost-of-living provision other fringe benefits, is the only we can begin to slow the rise in summer prices. For if high-productive industries like Ford can't stop prices, how can many other, less productive industries stop raising p

And if prices don't stop going how are people supposed to buy goods and services that lead to timed and more employment? I say two cheers for Ford for our thinking and laying it on the if you want to stop prices from going up and assure additional employment, take a smaller pay in. With that lead followed through industry the smaller pay raise a larger real increase because of 0.20 price increases than (most) of us have been getting some years now. Bring it on home.

The Distant Candidate

By Anthony Lewis

HELENA, Calif., Sept. 8—Nell McLaughlin is a widow who owns a home here at the upper end of the valley, in the grape country of San Francisco Bay. She is a Democrat. But if she had to vote now, she would vote for President.

Ford sort of gives me confidence she says, "and Carter doesn't. He tells me Carter is a very yellow, but I wonder if we need a suspicious of him: the way he's rushing up. Don't we need the basic qualities? Ford is honest, can't doubt that. And he's that it's wonderful.

In fact, there is a sense of distance from Carter, of uneasiness. Feelings are out there in the air. I believe, then the television debates will be extraordinarily important. For many others may judge the essential character of a Democrat they would like to vote but feel they do not know.

the debates may not be Carter to close that feeling. Some Democrats will see another staged occasion where candidate can come up with answers. And the debates to break through the indifference may be the most serious of the Democrats this year—that a majority of potential voters do not vote.

WASHINGTON — Following are excerpts of a White House transcript of an exchange between Ron Nessen, President Ford's press secretary, and White House reporters on Friday, Sept. 3, as Mr. Nessen announced the plans for the President's first overtly political appearance of the campaign.

Mr. Nessen: The next campaign trip will be to Ann Arbor the week of Sept. 13, probably to the University of Michigan, and when more details are ready to be announced we will have them for you.

Q: Why is this still so vague?

A: It's not vague. Look, we've had this plan arranged and organized for quite some time. It's our conscious decision, it's the plan that we believe is best designed to win this election, to get across the central theme of this election which is that the President ought to be elected. It's the way we've chosen to do it. Perhaps you have a disagreement with it. Perhaps other candidates in other years have done their campaigns differently. I just want to tell you now, that this is the strategy that we are following, that we have devised after lots of thought, after the President has spent a long time on it. It is our strategy. As I say, others may think it's right or wrong. It's not the strategy that other candidates have followed in other years. But it's our strategy. It's the strategy that we have drafted up because we believe it will win.

Q: What's the strategy? What is the strategy? All I'm saying is you're vague about the day, you're vague about the place—probably University of Michigan, perhaps during the week of—

A: No, I didn't say "perhaps." I said "the week of."

Q: Ron, what do you mean the central theme of the campaign is that the President ought to be elected? That's the objective, isn't it?

A: I didn't say the central theme. I said—

Q: Yes, you did.

A: What did I say?

Q: The central theme was—

A: I didn't mean the theme. I meant the objective. The objective of the campaign is to have the President re-elected. We are following a strategy that has been worked out and I think all of you have written about and talked about.

Q: What is the President doing next week? Does he have campaign engagements or speeches?

A: Well, I think you know he's probably going to speak to the B'nai B'rith next Thursday. That's been announced. He probably is going to see the Catholic bishops next week. I believe that's been announced.

Q: Do you have a date on that? I believe you said Wednesday or Thursday.

A: I don't have it yet.

Q: The Michigan thing, is that what he's going to call the official kickoff of the fall campaign?

A: I think that's what you're going to call it, the official kickoff. I don't know how you say that—I mean, that's the kind of tradition—I don't know, you could say that the campaign began on July 1, 1975 when he announced his candidacy. The announcement speech, or the Russell, Kan. trip or whatever. We consider this to be his next campaign trip.

Q: Ron, when and why is he going to see the Catholic bishops?

A: It was sort of mutually arranged so that they could discuss issues that were of interest to the bishops and of interest to him.

Q: Here?

A: In the White House, right.

Q: Who asked for the meeting with the bishops?

A: I think it was sort of mutually agreed to. Obviously, the President invited them to come to the White House.

Q: When you were asked a question of what he was doing in the campaign next week you mentioned the Catholic bishops—

A: No, I didn't mean to say that the speech to B'nai B'rith or the meeting with Catholic bishops was campaigning. We don't have—as I say, the next out-of-town campaign trip will be to the University of Michigan the week of the 13th.

Q: They're not campaign things?

A: I wouldn't call them campaign things.

Q: Did you say what President Ford's going to do on Labor Day?

A: It'll be a regular work day here.

Q: Is Sept. 14 the day, because this has been published?

A: Well, at this point, if I were you, I would stick to "the week of Sept. 13."

Q: You said yesterday that the reason you couldn't announce this yesterday was because you know that we would have a lot of questions about it once it was revealed.

A: Yeah. And you do. Lo and behold, you do!

Q: Gosh, I can't think of a single thing. (Laughter.) The President's going to make a speech at the University of Michigan; you can't tell us exactly where or exactly what date it's going to be on. What fascinating detail is there? The President's going to make a speech. You're not even classifying it as the kickoff of his campaign. Maybe you can tell us some of these things that we ought to be asking about.

A: What's the subject matter?

Q: I'm serious, is there some unusual format that's going to be undertaken?

A: No, it'll be a speech—it'll be a speech. I haven't got the subject matter to give you today.

Q: Will it not be the theme of the campaign, this speech? Will he not outline and unveil and pinpoint what he's going to do?

A: I think he did that in Vail [Colo.]. The seven points of the campaign, the seven themes of the campaign.

Q: Well, then, that changes from what [James A. Baker 3d] the campaign chairman told us subsequent, after he had that Vail news conference.

A: Which was?

Q: Well, that he was going to outline the theme of the campaign in one of his initial speeches, point out a couple of issues that he found significant among the voters.

A: Well, I don't have—I'm not going to announce a theme for that speech today.

Q: Ron, is the President going to make one speech, every two weeks?

A: Probably a little more frequently than that. I think as Jim [Baker] said he outlined the strategy pretty thoroughly at that time.

Q: Is that right, one a week?

A: Probably a little closer to two a week, yeah.

Q: Two a week.

A: No, I say one a week would be closer to the fact than one every two weeks.

Q: Ron, you said that this was a strategy reached after careful thought.

A: Um-hum.

Q: Could you share with us at this point what the thought was? What's he trying to accomplish by this strategy?

A: I think what I tried to say before, that the strategy is designed to elect the President. After all, the issue of this election is—You have a President who's been here for two years, who has a record, who has run up accomplishments, who has proposals for additional accomplishments. Do you want to keep him? Or, you have another candidate, with proposals and promises and positions on issues? Do you want to replace the President you have with the other fellow? Now that's the issue of the campaign.

Q: (Laughter.)

A: You asked me a question. I'm answering it with our answer. If you want to hear it, okay; if you want to laugh it off I'll stop and go on to the next question. Okay, you asked me a question. I'm trying to answer it. This is the central issue of this campaign. Our strategy is designed to make the point that you should keep the President you have. There's a lot of people that have worked a lot of hours, including the President—and, as I say, you've all heard about it or seen the strategy book and so forth, and we are following our agreed-upon strategy.

Q: Is that the theme? Keep the only President you have?

A: It's one of the themes.

Q: That was one he used in Texas, where it didn't work too well. Is there any reconsideration—

A: Well, you know, I, okay.

Q: You started out with an announcement, that he's going to speak in Michigan, and if I've taken notes correctly you said this was the plan and later you said this was the strategy.

A: That's right.

Q: Maybe we've got a semantic problem here. To me a plan or a strategy is more than—

A: Well, maybe I misunderstood Helen's initial question [Helen Thomas of United Press International]. I thought Helen was saying why are you doing this, why are you waiting so late, why are you—

Q: No, I said why are you so vague?

A: I think I did misunderstand Helen's question, which led me to begin to talk about the strategy when nobody really asked about it.

Q: Well, that's what I'm going to ask about. You've made an announcement of one trip planned. But what is this strategy that you say is laid out on the books?

A: I think it's well, the overall strategy is what I was trying to tell Phil. [Philip Shabecoff of The New York Times.] To draw this distinction, to draw the fact that you have a President with a record and with accomplishments and with a challenger with promises and proposals and our strategy is designed to emphasize the point that you should keep the President you have. Now, as for tactics or specific speeches, Howard raised that question. [Howard Norton of The National Courier.] I think Jim Baker has probably outlined the specifics of that a number of times, which is some major speeches or important speeches on some of the important topics. The debates, of course, are an important part of this campaign, as has been said. And that's as much of the strategy as I care to outline at this point.

Q: How about news conferences? Will they be included?

A: There will be some, yes.

Q: Ron, why did the President decide to go to the University of Michigan? Can you tell us his thinking on that?

A: It's his alma mater, and—he wanted to go there. It's his home state, it's his home school, and he believes that it's a particularly appropriate place for the speech that he intends to make.

Q: He knows what the theme is, then?

A: He knows what he will be saying.

Q: Earlier you said one speech a week was the proposal. Can we say, then, that he might make eight or nine major speeches in the campaign, since there are eight or nine weeks left?

A: Well, all I was doing was quoting back to you what Jim Baker and others have outlined. . . . I thought everybody knew the strategy and apparently they didn't and I was relating to you what has been said before.

Q: I've tried three or four times—

A: All right, go.

Q: I want to go back to what Phil said, and also to something Baker said, to try to pinpoint this question of strategy a little more specifically. One of the things Baker said was that the rough average of out-of-town trips in September would be about one a week but that he expected that to pick up, to increase, in October. So is part of your strategy that the President is going to spend more time in Washington in September and is this in line with the idea of presenting an image as President and so forth in September—

A: It's not an image as President. He is the President.

Q: All right, a political image. And then speed it up and increase it in October. Is that part of the strategy?

A: The strategy is that early in October to see where we stand, what progress has been made. The first debate will be over, and to then make a further set of decisions early in October.

Q: Ron, Baker yesterday indicated . . . the geography of the campaign is apparently flexible. Is it your understanding? The Republicans in '68 and '72 had a so-called Southern strategy.

A: No, we have a national strategy, which is to win all the states and as many votes as possible.

Q: In terms of travel, have you picked any states, do you have any general regions, any specific areas that are being considered? He indicated that there were not. Is that the case, or do you know particular areas where the President is likely to go?

A: As I say, we have a national strategy.

Q: He's not going to every state?

A: Well, I think you asked that yesterday, and I didn't say he was.

Q: Do you expect he'd be going to northern Michigan on that Michigan trip?

A: As I've said, this is as much of the strategy as I care to disclose today. As we go along we'll talk about more of the strategy.

Q: Will that trip include a stop in Grand Rapids, Mich., and a stay there for the duration of the campaign on the front porch?

A: (Laughter.) That is one option. That is not one option.

On enjoying the merry-go-round

Remember the hike to the meadow, and how you could hardly wait to see if your new kite would fly? Or riding a bike, and dreaming what it would be like to drive that first car?

The joy of anticipating life's great moments was brought home to us recently when we previewed a new TV film, "Everybody Rides the Carousel." Done in sometimes-surrealistic animation by John and Faith Hubble, it carries the viewer through the eight stages of life as defined by author-psychologist Erik Erikson. You see children and, later, adults riding life's merry-go-round, grabbing for the brass ring at each of the eight stages.

Erikson's message is that every age, from infancy to the golden years, offers something special to anticipate. Too optimistic? Not really. Have you ever watched mature people discover a new dance? Or grandparents play with a new grandchild?

Enjoying each age for its special pleasures is, an art worth learning. Something like savoring dinner in an exotic restaurant. No point ordering five dessert courses. Appetizer, salad, entree—each has its own appeal at the right moment.

If we understand ourselves and our life cycles, says Erikson, we never become jaded. In childhood, anticipation comes naturally. Grown-ups must cultivate a knack for turning dreams into reality. Adults must learn to make the most of education, career, family, travel, retirement. And it's never too late. If we miss the brass ring at one turn, we can grasp it at the next, and the next. . . .

Are you living your stage of life to the hilt? Looking forward to your next circle on the merry-go-round? Step aboard the carousel tomorrow evening on CBS and take Erikson's eight free rides. And see how you measure up.

THE TRENDEX STORY: PART 2

THE PURCHASING RATE FOR THE BRIDE-TO-BE IS 136% MORE FOR TELEVISION SETS 373% MORE FOR VACUUM CLEANERS 676% MORE FOR BROILERS 835% MORE FOR TOASTERS THAN FOR TOTAL U.S. HOUSEHOLDS

AND THERE'S STILL MORE TO COME.

More proof from Trendex that the bride-to-be is your most efficient customer.

You know how Trendex works: It's an independent survey of 71,000 U.S. households, done on a national probability basis. A cross-section of every market you sell. It tells you who buys what. And when.

And now, for the first time, you can compare first-marriage households vs. total households.

The champ? The bride-to-be. For product after product, she's the most efficient customer you can reach anywhere.

Look at the facts: For the three-month period from October through December 1975, the acquisition rate of vacuum cleaners by brides* was almost five times that of total households. For televisions, it was twice that of total households.

And for the six months from July through December 1975, the rate of first-time marriage households who acquired broilers was almost eight times the acquisition rate of total households. For toasters, it was over nine.

Trendex proves it: It's the bride-to-be who does the big buying. And that makes perfect marketing sense.

The girl getting married for the first time has nothing. Needs everything. That's why brides spend more in a shorter period of time than any other group measured by Trendex.

Let Trendex prove it to you. You can't find a better customer anywhere. And you reach her in Modern Bride. The one magazine read by eight out of every ten girls passing through the bridal market.

*Brides who married for the first time in 1975.

Excerpts From Debate of 5 Democratic Senate Candidates

The following are excerpts from the debate between the five Democratic candidates for the Senate nomination.

Assessment of Opponents
The five candidates for the Senate nomination are the most vulnerable as the program and the back-against-the-Democratic-opponents Republican candidate could possibly attack?

In the candidacy of Senator Buckley, the long association with Nixon and Ford Administration specific praise for both fizzes in our capacity to help solve problems and the way in which they're personality disputes and has not given the public that can happen.

Our on West Side
I just came from the cemetery—the West Side which is dormant. According to the Building Dept, stopped $2 billion instruction jobs for New York which gave us the highest in the nation.

Senator Buckley ran six with a slogan which was active. It simply said: Isn't it a Senator? He was addressed to, and he was successful with, that of working-class New York who, in the main, still rate, but have felt more excluded from the councils of the Democratic Party in this state politics and the new poli-

I would hope to represent that older, central tradition speak of myself as aocrat, which certainly I ple who go back before was a party of coalitions in particular which had for the working masses and their moral concerns riotism, their feeling that country which is somehow rest of the world might e to be isolated from.

Campaign Casualty
We came out of the convention with a feeling inspiration; we had deperson here might have Buckley. Mr. Clark, that since campaign has deteriorated, name-calling the ges — charges of fraud, McCarthyism, charges of splitting and cutting tape also that one of the candi-

Three candidates for the Democratic nomination for the United States Senate from New York charged yesterday that former President Richard M. Nixon's "Southern strategy" had resulted in the shortchanging of New York on Federal aid.

One of the three, Representative Bella S. Abzug, attempted to score some political points with the charge by adding that the family assistance plan of one of her opponents, Daniel P. Moynihan, then a White House aide, was part of that strategy. Mr. Moynihan responded that his plan was designed to help southern blacks.

The charges highlighted an often-acrimonious debate at The New York Times in which the candidates also clearly defined, perhaps for the first time, their differences on national defense. Two of the candidates questioned the electability rivals.

Mr. Moynihan and, to a lesser extent, Mrs. Abzug were the principal targets of barbs that often flew up and down a long table, with the candidates on one side and Times reporters and editors opposite them. The choice of targets presumably reflected the general view that Mrs. Abzug and Mr. Moynihan were the front-runners.

The candidates have met for joint discussions or debates a half-dozen times or more and were generally familiar with their opponents' arguments—arguments that were often greeted with raised eyebrows, slight smiles and irritation rather than anger.

Each assumed a role in the confrontation. Mrs. Abzug was usually aggressive, invariably toward Mr. Moynihan. She often leaned on her record and experience.

Ramsey Clark took on a statesmanlike, above-the-battle posture, emphasizing issues and decrying the injection of personalities.

Mr. Moynihan, in shirtsleeves, often fielded barbs with humor or counter barbs. When he was not fielding, he acted the historian and lecturer. Paul O'Dwyer served as the often humorous needler of both Mr. Moynihan and Mrs. Abzug.

Abraham Hirschfeld was frequently aggressive, particularly toward Mrs. Abzug. Other highlights of the 2 hour 20 minute confrontation included the following:

Three of the candidates—excluding Mr. Moynihan and Mr. O'Dwyer—were critical of the Beame administration and none was willing to endorse the Mayor's re-election.

Mrs. Abzug, retreating from her no-support statement, said she could campaign for Mr. Moynihan if he were the primary victor and renounced the Nixon and Ford Administrations he served.

Mr. Moynihan did not renounce the G.O.P. administrations but he conceded that he had been "excessively gracious" in his praise of Mr. Nixon when he left the Nixon Administration in 1971.

on the serious fiscal problems of the city and the state?

CLARK: Things that will help are the national health insurance program, which will take a major part of the health costs that are so burdensome on state and city governments. The full-employment programs that the Federal Government can initiate. I'd like to see the Federal Government use its tax powers to in a sense equalize the advantage of areas in the Sun Belt.

I'd like to see the creation of a national citizens banks. The equalization of energy rates across the country through the exercise of Federal powers over commerce, the Federal Power Commission or otherwise, seems essential to me to prevent the continuing dislocation, relocation of industry.

I'd like to see categorical programs for the Federal Government in areas like criminal justice.

Programs for Improvement

HIRSCHFELD: First, I would start rebuilding the West Side Highway for which there is $1 billion available. In addition, I would take the other billion dollars that is available from Federal funds for housing and construction and build homes in Bedford-Stuyvesant, in the South Bronx. We have vacant lots block by block. And the main thing is that those vacant blocks are about 40 percent of the cost of new construction.

In addition, the major problem of New York City and state is the loss of the garment industry. We lost the garment industry because southern Senators have reversed the duty on piecegoods.

MOYNIHAN: Instead of getting into a list of programs, I might make two general points.

The first point is simply that the Federal Government has got to learn to think "New York" in the way it has learned to think "Appalachia" and think "Deep South."

You go back to George Washington Plunkett of sacred memory, who used to preside about two blocks to the west here until the McManis game along. He said about 1900 that New York is "pie for the hayseeds."

City Stripped by Albany

Even then a Tammany leader knew that New York was just being stripped by the State Legislature, the Assembly. The idea that this is a source of wealth which can be taken elsewhere is a deep idea in our political culture.

Second, is to simply say that in the distribution of money from the Federal Government, it's been quite extraordinary. We get "soft" money, whereas in the main the rest of the country gets hard money.

We get 17 percent of the welfare money the Federal Government gives out; we get less than 2 percent for the Corps of Engineers peak civil construction budget.

O'DWYER: I find it very difficult to understand how we came to this position we're in now. We contribute so much to the national treasury and get so little back, by comparison to California, that contributes so little and gets so much back. The imbalance immediately suggests that we are being done in.

HIRSCHFELD: The three of them—Mrs. Abzug, Mr. Moynihan and Mr. O'Dwyer—were in the leading positions in government and they have brought us to the problems that we are in.

Coalition Seeks Solutions

MRS. ABZUG: I have recently been involved in the formation of a coalition of members of Congress from the Northwest and the Midwest. This is a coalition which controls over 218 votes.

And the purpose for our coming together is because we have discovered over a period of many years that the Northeast has been discriminated

National

Inter was "contradictory" in statements about F.B.I. Director J. Edgar Hoover's resignation conference. He said that Mr. Hoover's lack of compassion toward Mr. Buckley should have been a factor in accepting gifts from Mrs. Hoover at a time when his wife was ill. The President also said he was "confused" by Mr. Carter's statement that he was uncertain whether he would retain Mr. Kelley at the F.B.I. [1:1.]

Morality in foreign affairs would be the goal of a Carter Administration, the Democratic candidate told the B'nai B'rith convention. While he gave no details, Mr. Carter suggested the United States would do more good by using its foreign policy as a lever to advance human rights in Communist countries and in repressive regimes friendly to the United States. [1:2.]

Admitting error, former Gulf Oil lobbyist Claude C. Wild Jr. said he never gave Senator Robert J. Dole $2,000 in 1970 for Republican candidates as he had said he had done. He explained that he had come to believe that he had put the money in a safe deposit vault. Mr. Wild made a public apology to Mr. Dole, who accepted it. [1:3.]

The first debate between the Presidential candidates will be held in a 167-year-old theater in Philadelphia, the League of Women Voters announced. Almost simultaneously, however, the candidates of a minor party filed suit in Federal court to halt the debates on the ground they violated the communications and election laws. [3:5-6.]

"Are you now a member of the Communist Party, U.S.A., or any subdivision of the Communist Party, U.S.A.?" will no longer be asked of applicants for Federal jobs. The Civil Service Commission ordered the deletion of all political loyalty questions from standard job applications to comply with a recent court ruling. [1:5.]

Pervasive cheating and other dishonest practices at West Point were alleged in sworn affidavits from 65 cadets accused of cheating. The statements accused that nearly 700 other cadets had engaged in such practices as cheating in academic courses, lying to officers and even "fixing" student honor boards to obtain not-guilty verdicts. [1:1-2.]

A public warning about conditions at Attica prison made in July has cost the man who made it his job. Scott Christianson, chief of the State Commission of Correction team that reported on conditions at the troubled prison, said it had been made clear to him that the commission did not approve of his independent disclosure. [3:1-2.]

Hopeful buyers formed long lines outside candy stores, supermarkets and newsstands as the state's new lottery went into operation. Officials said sales were well above expectations and they felt that knowing at once whether one had won anything, as well as the 10-month absence of a lottery, were responsible for the interest. [4:3-5.]

Business/Finance

Michele Sindona surrendered in New York City on a warrant for his extradition to Italy to face fraud charges. The financier, who held a major interest in the Franklin National Bank when it failed in 1974, is accused in Italy of taking money from banks there and falsifying the records. [5:7.]

Britain's second-largest company has admitted it made questionable payments of $2.4 million to various governments or government-owned businesses since 1972. The company, Imperial Chemical Industries, made the report to the Securities and Exchange Commission. I.C.I. does virtually no business in the United States, but does have bonds outstanding here. [5:4.]

Triple antitrust damages would be possible for states to obtain from businesses convicted of price-fixing under provisions of a major antitrust bill passed by the Senate. The measure, which now goes to the House, also broadens subpoena powers. [5:3.]

Stock prices encountered profit-taking pressures and the Dow Industrial average closed down 3.65 at 992.94. [5:1.] Credit markets were quiet and firm as the corporate sector awaited new low rates for utilities. [5:3-4.] Corn and wheat prices fell in the wake of a large decline in soybean prices. [6:1.]

failure to disassociate from the policies in those Administrations, will be a liability in the campaign against Buckley.

CLARK: Well, of course, there's been name-calling. And I think the people who have been name-calling are Mrs. Abzug and Mr. Moynihan.

But rather than talk about what's been done wrong I'd like to talk about what can be done that's right. I've tried to run a campaign that is consistent with the Democratic theory. We don't take contributions from anybody in excess of $100; we've had about 15,000 contributions. We've got a 94-page book out on the citizens agenda.

Oscar M. Taylor, president of New York State's Civil Service Commission and former executive vice president of the New York Telephone Company, died Sunday at his home in Burlingame, Calif. He was 86 years old.

Averell Harriman.

Mr. Taylor began his career as a cable splicer's helper in the Midwest and spent more than 40 years with the Bell System. He joined the New York company in 1927 as a student engineer and was elected vice president in charge of personnel in 1941 and vice president in charge of operations in 1944.

The developer of the Bell Telephone System's basic training program, he became assistant vice president of his parent concern, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, in 1951 and executive vice president of the New York company the following year.

After resigning his Albany post, Mr. Taylor was elected to the board of directors of the Mutual of Omaha insurance company, held several directorships in the concern's subsidiaries and served on six other Mutual affiliate boards.

In World War I he served in the Army Signal Corps.

in Court for His Sentencing, Withdraws Earlier Plea of Guilty

By MAX H. SEIGEL
Circuit Court Judge Pratt had noted Mr. Troy's sudden withdrawal of his plea of guilty to a charge that he had filed a false tax return that did not report income from the estates of his late father and the Federal prosecutor, who had signed an affidavit admitting his guilt and who had pleaded guilty before the late Judge Judd last July 2, had a Federal Court in Brooklyn sentencing.

The New York Times/Carl T. Gosciniak
Matthew J. Troy Jr. at Federal Court yesterday.

He could win acquittal because he had been committed to prison for a crime he had committed yesterday's court hearing.

ing, Judge Pratt had noted Mr. Troy's sudden withdrawal of his plea of guilty to a charge that he had filed a false tax return that did not report income from the estates of his late father and the Federal prosecutor, who had signed an affidavit admitting his guilt and who had pleaded guilty before the late Judge Judd last July 2, had a Federal Court in Brooklyn sentencing.

"It's relevant to the plea to know what judge will sentence," Judge Pratt declared. "He may have that as a reason for his plea of not guilty. He's entitled to a trial."

Concerning the affidavit Mr. Troy signed earlier this year admitting his guilt, the counselman said that he had been upset that day and had not read it carefully.

"This is a surprise to the government," said Ronald DePetris, an assistant United States attorney handling the prosecution, as he asked that the Government be heard.

"It comes as a surprise to me, too," the judge replied.

Affidavit Cited by Government
"We have a signed statement by Mr. Troy admitting his guilt," Mr. DePetris continued. "Under these circumstances, it would seem a trial would serve little purpose."

Then, taking into account the statement by the prosecutor, Judge Pratt decided to have both sides offer arguments on the pleas at the hearing later this month. But he asked Mr. DePetris to "focus on the circumstances brought on by the death of Judge Judd. In my mind, that carries considerable weight," he said.

Judge Judd died July 17 while attending a judicial meeting.

On July 2, Mr. Troy, a former power in the Democratic Party here, and currently chairman of the City Council Finance Committee, had entered a plea of guilty to one count of a three-count information charging the filing of false tax returns for 1970, 1971 and 1972.

Two and a half months earlier, he had signed an affidavit admitting his guilt. It said, in part, that during the years in question "I received substantial gross receipts from various estates which I handled as an attorney."

Admits It Was Unlawful
"These gross receipts," it continued, "represented moneys which I withdrew from the estates without any authorization to do so. I knew this was unlawful. I utilized these moneys either to support my family and law practice or to repay estates from which I had previously withdrawn such moneys."

Asked how he could reconcile this admission with his plea of not guilty yesterday, Mr. Troy said:

"I signed it [the affidavit] in the U.S. Attorney's office. I don't remember when I didn't read it particularly well because I was tremendously upset the day I signed it. I want time to recant, and I want to have a chance to prove that what's in that statement is not true."

Before entering the courtroom yesterday, Mr. Troy revealed that he was under investigation by the Queens District Attorney's office.

"I had a meeting lasting about an hour last month with assistant District Attorney Thomas Demakos," he said. "But I've heard nothing since."

District Attorney Nicholas Ferraro confirmed yesterday that an investigation had been started by his office in July. He added that his office had to conduct its own inquiry since Federal authorities had informed him it would be illegal for them to turn over their findings to him.

Accused Physician in Jersey Denies Causing Hepatitis

Dr. Peter T. DeMarco during interview at his office in Pine Hill, N.J.

By DONALD JANSON
Special to The New York Times

PINE HILL, Sept. 8—Dr. Peter T. DeMarco denied today that syringes he had used in treating patients had caused hepatitis.

Nor, he said in an interview at his office here, is the State Board of Medical Examiners competent to judge the efficacy of the experimental drug he developed and has injected into patients for 16 years.

The board, in suspending his license to practice medicine Aug. 27, charged him with malpractice for allegedly using improperly sterilized syringes and for prescribing an unproven drug.

Dr. DeMarco said the board could not judge the healing value of the drug because it had not tested it.

He said that he, on the other hand, had tested it on humans for 16 years and had produced "spectacular" cures for a variety of ills.

Restraint Order in Effect
The State Department of Health obtained a temporary restraining order in Superior Court in Camden on July 23 barring Dr. DeMarco from giving injections of procaine polyvinylpyrrolidone.

The department contends that reuse of syringes contaminated by blood or body tissue from other patients has been responsible for an outbreak of hepatitis. On Aug. 30 the department reported that laboratory tests had confirmed the presence of hepatitis in 64 patients who had received injections from the 44-year-old Pine Hill doctor. Three days earlier the State Board of Medical Examiners suspended his license pending a board hearing in Princeton today. The hearing was postponed indefinitely when Dr. DeMarco's attorney, John Montis of Camden, obtained an order from the Appellate Division of Superior Court last Friday granting more time to prepare his case.

Dr. DeMarco and a Philadelphia pharmacist developed procaine PVP soon after the physician, who is from Reading, Pa., was graduated from Hahnemann Medical College in Philadelphia in 1957. They patented the drug in 1967. Dr. DeMarco injects it into the arms or hips of patients suffering from gangrene, cardiac conditions, circulatory problems, burns and other ailments.

Patients Support Doctor
The tall, sandy-haired physician said the drug had saved many lives and prolonged others by regenerating cells. His patients have formed an organization called Save Our Shots (S.O.S.) in support of restoration of his practice as quickly as possible. The shots are not available elsewhere, and the patients contend they are essential to their health and lives.

Two of the patients have died and others have regressed since the court acted, Dr. DeMarco said. He said the two fatalities were George Kennedy of Trenton and Nicholas Matthews of Philadelphia. They would be alive today, the physician said, had their treatment continued. More will die soon without it, he added.

New York's Lottery Is an Instant Success

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER
The new New York State instant lottery opened yesterday with long lines of buyers mobbing newsstands, supermarket counters and candy stores throughout the state.

The manager of the newsstand in the Pan Am Building, at 200 Park Avenue, reported that it had sold out its entire allotment of 10,000 tickets by noon.

The sales were tremendously above expectations at the 8,100 authorized outlets, state officials said.

Knowing instantly whether one had a winner and the fact that it was the first lottery is more than ten months were believed responsible for the mass purchases.

Each $1 Ticket Has Six Small Squares
Covered by a waxlike substance. By rubbing off the wax, a buyer can tell immediately whether he has won a prize. Three squares with the same numerals constitute a winner, and small prizes—$2 and $5—may be cashed on the spot.

In addition, any combination of tickets with letters spelling out "New York" entitles the winner to $2,500 worth of groceries at a market of his choice.

O'Dwyer Comes Close
John D. Quinn, director of the New York State Lottery, said that by noon, Diane Furman of Brocton had won $2,500 worth of groceries; George Knopf of Rochester, $1,000, and Bob Patterson of Watertown and Abraham Zaslofsky of Old Bridge, N.J., had won tickets with a "jackpot designation." Jackpot winners get $5,000 and a chance in the special drawing for a top prize of $1,000 a week for life.

Mr. Quinn said that to promote lottery and merchandise sales, some storeowners were giving away instant tickets with purchases. He himself sold some tickets on the second floor of the Capitol in Albany.

SUFFOLK PASSES BILL TO SAVE FARMLANDS

County Legislature Agrees to Buy $21 Million Development Rights to Preserve Open Spaces

By IVER PETERSON
Special to The New York Times
HAUPTPAUGE, L.I., Sept. 8—The Suffolk County Legislature, in what was believed to be the first action of its kind by any local government in the country, agreed today to begin buying $21 million in development rights to eastern Long Island farmland to keep it out of the hands of real estate developers.

All but two of the Legislature's 18 members voted in favor of the measure at a special session called today by the Democratic majority, whose leadership had ascertained that the two-thirds majority needed to pass any money measure was assured. Last May a vote on the measure to protect the county's dwindling farmlands ended in a successful motion to table because too many lawmakers feared that the plan would swamp the county's bonding ability, already burdened by the deficit-ridden Southwest Sewer District project.

The county's Farm Lands Acquisition Program, designed to preserve the dwindling farm industry and preserve open spaces, will allow the county to buy from farmland owners the development rights to the land while leaving title of the property with the owners. Sellers of the development rights would retain ownership of the land and be free either to keep it under cultivation or let it lie fallow as open spaces, but would not be able to sell it for any purpose other than farming.

Plan Widely Considered
Numerous state governments, including New Jersey's, as well as local governments, are considering this and other measures to protect agriculture and open spaces. But county planners here said today that none had yet moved beyond enacting special zoning laws and tax incentives for farmers to stay on their land.

The packet of measures passed by the Suffolk Legislature included a general law authorizing the program, resolutions authorizing the issuance of $21 million in 30-year county bonds to pay for it and permission for the plan's architect, County Supervisor John V. N. Klein, to begin purchasing development rights to 3,883 acres of farmland, some of it already fallow, in the Towns of Riverhead, Southampton and Southold.

If all goes as planned over the next three years, through 1979, the program could total some $75 million in purchases of development rights to about 15,000 acres, Mr. Klein said after the voting.

"I first proposed this plan in 1972," he said, "and after four and a half years, and after getting my nose bloodied about 50 times over this thing, I obviously feel a great sense of satisfaction."

But Mr. Klein's assurances that all the lands whose development rights are purchased would first be inspected for quality and fairness of price, which prefaced the two and a half hours of debate here this morning, did not overcome the opposition of Anthony Noto of North Babylon and Louis T. Howard of Amityville, both Republicans. They were the only members of the County Legislature to vote "no" to all of the farm preservation measures.

Aid Seen for Speculators
"I see the county doing nothing but bailing out the land speculators," Mr. Noto said. He argued that the speculator, having foreseen the eventual passage of the law, had already sold large parcels of farmland they owned to dummy corporations they also controlled for inflated prices, thus pushing up the cost of the development rights to the county. The development rights will be valued at 80 percent of the value of the land.

Mr. Howard, during the debate, foresaw a county budget deficit for the next year. Mr. Klein will unveil his 1977 county budget on Sept. 27.

"In a month or two, when we're asked to vote for a tax increase or layoffs of county workers, I don't want to say we've already spent the money," Mr. Howard said. "I'm not going to be a legislator voting $21 million now, when later on people will not be able to put food on their tables because the county's laid them off."

44 L THE NEW YORK TIMES, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1976 Minus 6, De the Senate

Excerpts From Debate of Five Democratic Candidates for Senatorial Nomination

against by Federal formulas in legislation. And particularly accelerated in the last eight years under Nixon and Ford.

We have been getting much less than the amount of money we put in as tax dollars.

MOYNIHAN: About two generations ago the Federal Government, under Roosevelt and mainly during World War II, began to be a major source of economic infrastructure. And the South, which controls those Congressional committees, cottoned on to this and began routinely to involve themselves in the kind of hard infrastructure programs of the Federal Government.

It would be characteristic of New York State that we built our portion of the interstate highway system, the Thruway by ourselves, paying tolls for a quarter-century while we pay taxes to build freeways in Alabama and California and Arizona.

CLARK, Mrs. Abzug says her job is essentially to bring money into New York. I think that's the best way not to do it, because there are 49 other states who are not going to load up your bags.

The role of the Senator is to help enact laws that this nation needs that serve all of its people. We want our equal share, nothing else.

Mr. Moynihan has not answered the question. Obviously, the Nixon Southern strategy dumped billions of petrodollars into the Sun Belt—and we know it.

O'DWYER: Well, I would say that it's sort of naive to think that we lost 600,000 jobs in this state and they all went to the Sunbelt, and not to suggest that there was some sort of a conspiracy dealing with us and with other Northeastern states at the same time.

Family Plan Discussed

MRS. ABZUG: The original family assistance plan that Mr. Moynihan takes credit for, would have actually been part of a Southern strategy structure. The cost would have gone down in New York State, for example, only by 10 percent, that is our payments for welfare.

Whereas in Alabama, they would have had 72 percent Federal take-over; Arkansas, 100 percent; Florida, 95 percent; Georgia, 84 percent; Louisiana, 92 percent; Mississippi, 100 percent.

Family Assistance Defended

MOYNIHAN: One quick point about the family assistance plan. Mrs. Abzug did vote against it and that is clear. I designed that program and it was designed, no question, to transfer money to the South. And it was designed to transfer money to blacks in the South. It was the largest transfer of the most important piece of social legislation since the New Deal. It was designed to put money in the hands of Southern blacks.

Q: To what degree are local and state political leaders responsible for the financial difficulties of the city and the state?

MOYNIHAN: The first fact of the city is that it's a manufacturing city, although this is in a curious way not as evident to us as it might be. The decline in manufacturing had set in pretty solidly by the early '60s. In the '60s this was disguised by creating government employment.

I don't think local political leaders have much capacity to see this kind of movement, or if they do see it they don't know what to do about it. I stick to the general proposition that we are having trouble recognizing that we are in trouble. It is a new idea to us; it's not built into our politics.

Local Government Power

O'DWYER: I tend to agree that the power of local government is limited. In attempting to prevent 600,000 jobs from leaving New York, from moving out, we did a great deal in developing and spending money in industry, nevertheless, that was a one-shot situation—I'm talking about building construction. When the construction was over that meant our people were out of work.

I myself have been responsible for getting labor and industry together and keeping at least one brewery alive and a couple of other smaller businesses afloat.

MRS. ABZUG: I think we suffered a great deal of assault under the Rockefeller administration.

I think there has been a certain amount of corruption which has created problems in local government; the cases for example, on child care that have been given in this city.

So that I feel there has been a certain amount of inefficiency, lack of coordination, and some corruption which has played a role in the development of the problems of the city, although I believe the major impact has been the Federal impact in the economy.

A Question of Responsibility

CLARK: The question is what responsibility the state and city government have for our present condition, and the answer is an enormous part of the responsibility. It's impossible to look at the history of post-World War II New York without seeing city leadership and state leadership engaging in acts that have inevitably driven power to the National Government.

Of all the sins of commission or omission, the greatest and gravest to me in the failure of state and local governments is to tell the people the truth about the emerging crisis. Politicians don't want to say unpopular things. They find out what people want to hear and they say it as pretty as they can.

The Rockefeller administration, I think, will prove a historical disaster. We've got a bunch of pyramids across the state to show that we had the will to build them all; or a World Trade Center or something like that, but not to take care of the health of our people, and not to educate and not to do the things that are essential.

HIRSCHFELD: Our problem is that this state is run by a political dictatorship. Almost every county chairman is on the payroll in Albany by the indicted Assembly leaders. They have no free hands, they have to do what they are told.

Q: Do you feel that Mayor Beame has presided effectively enough over the city's recovery to warrant re-election, or should he retire when his term is up?

HIRSCHFELD: Yes, I do think he should retire when his term is up.

MOYNIHAN: One primary at a time!

O'DWYER: For the first time today I favor Mr. Moynihan's answer.

MRS. ABZUG: Well, I think that the question as to whether or not he's going to run will be up to him. I do think that the city under this administration has failed to meet its problems.

I think it's an administration which has not really presented the kind of support for the problems that people have to warrant re-election.

CLARK: Mr. Beame became Mayor at an almost impossible time.

But you ask a question that really involves choice. Life is choice and I don't think the leadership has been as good as it could have been or as it needs to be. But you'll have to tell me what the alternatives are before I can tell you what I think Mayor Beame ought to do about the next primary.

HIRSCHFELD: You see, that is really the problem of New York State. You don't get a straight answer from anyone of my four opponents, who are just talking and talking and talking in rhetoric while New York is falling apart. You must have straight answers to questions, you cannot put up a building without a foundation.

O'DWYER: If things were so bad during this period of time, Abe, how'd you come to make $10 million in this town?

HIRSCHFELD: Because I'm working against people like the four of you who can make nothing.

Support in the Election

Q: Will you campaign for your opponent if you lose the primary? What impact do you think the various accusations will have in the campaign?

O'DWYER: I would campaign for whoever wins. And the extent of the campaigning will depend on a lot of things which will take place after the primary.

I would expect that if I were the winner, that each of those people would sit down with me on certain issues on which we disagree and then that they would make up their own minds to extend their support for me.

Q: Do you think that the nature of the primary so far has been damaging?

O'DWYER: I believe that with respect to Mr. Moynihan and Mrs. Abzug it has eliminated them from contention because I believe it has so damaged them that they cannot beat Mr. Buckley.

Some Clarity Necessary

MRS. ABZUG: Well, I've campaigned for both Mr. O'Dwyer and Mr. Clark in the past and I can envision my doing that again should they be the victors in this race.

I have indicated that I felt that there was some clarity necessary in the position of Mr. Moynihan as a candidate for the Democratic Party against Buckley and against the policies of Nixon and Ford.

I was very pleased to see that as a result of my raising this issue in a way that I did that Mr. Moynihan for the first time at least in the course of the campaign made clear that he condemned the actions of Mr. Nixon which I regarded as an important first step of a requirement for my support—actively campaigning—and I have an open mind on that subject.

And my mind is open and I hope that we'll be able to support each other and I still believe from the surveys and the polls that that nominee will be me and I assume that we'll get along well together and beat Senator Buckley as well as President Ford, because they are our real adversaries.

An Adherence to Principle

CLARK: Yes, I would support any of my opponents in the primary in the race against James Buckley, not out of any sense of party loyalty, because my loyalty would place principle over party always. I do find within the Democratic Party a greater adherence to the principles that I care about than in other parties.

I would support them because as an alternative—and life is choice, as I said earlier—to James Buckley, each is far superior. But I think that the truer tone of the campaign of Mrs. Abzug and Mr. Moynihan have hurt the Democratic chances. That doesn't concern me as much as the injury that I see to the American political process.

HIRSCHFELD: I think it's a very healthy situation that discussion between Abzug, Moynihan and so on. Because, as a builder, I know that when I hire a subcontractor I want to know his references. Is he qualified? What did he do? What is his experience? How did he deliver the job? And I think on that merit one should be elected.

I would support anyone whoever the public will decide.

Support Already Pledged

MOYNIHAN: I said on the day that I announced I would enter the primary that I would support whichever of us was nominated.

Q: That includes campaigning?

A: Yup. A tricky question, but, of course.

But I would like to be clear about this, which is that there is very pronounced and important difference among us issues. I represent, in my judgment I stand for a different tradition in the party than does Mrs. Abzug and Mr. Clark and Mr. O'Dwyer. I have tried to differentiate.

Q: Mrs. Abzug, you seemed to be saying a while ago that you have brought Mr. Moynihan around. Before you said you could not in any way support him.

MRS. ABZUG: I never said that. I always said that I was not going to vote for Buckley, that I was going to vote for the Democratic nominee. But the question of where I drew the line originally was on the question of whether I could actively campaign for a candidate who did not differentiate himself from the policies against which we run.

Mr. Moynihan: I felt, presented a fuzziness which would have burdened, I think, our capacity to beat Senator Buckley, who is associated with the Ford and the Nixon Policies. This is the issue, this was the issue that came out.

Q: He hasn't renounced those policies?

Open Mind on Rival

MRS. ABZUG: No, but he took a step. I have been very pleased to see this first step. But I have an open mind on the subject and will continue to have one.

O'DWYER: That's not what I read in the newspaper on three different occasions.

MRS. ABZUG: "It's what I said and where it came from and I know that the papers prefer to just deal with the headlines."

O'DWYER: No, no. It was not the headlines. It was twice—on two occasions.

MRS. ABZUG: I'll tell you what my statement was: Let's not try now to bring another factor into it. Let's try to deal with the issues. I'm sitting here and I'm saying it publicly and I have said it publicly.

Q: Do you credit Mrs. Abzug with having made a first step in the renunciation?

MOYNIHAN: No. He attacked Nixon for the first time.

MRS. ABZUG: He attacked Nixon for the first time.

MOYNIHAN: If I say that isn't so, then I am name-calling, is that the point?

Shades of Differences

O'DWYER: When you say somebody's guilty of McCarthyism, you're name-calling. If you say somebody spliced—improperly spliced—something out of meaning and spliced tape together that's really a direct accusation that goes to the character of your opponent.

MOYNIHAN: I did say that there was such a tampering.

MRS. ABZUG: Let's just get something clear about that. That's pure nonsense, pure nonsense. Two things were said on a commercial. It was a commercial. It said President Nixon was appointing Mr. Moynihan as an adviser and Mr. Moynihan said, "I now feel it an honor to serve in the Nixon Administration." Those were the two things that were said on the spot.

Those are not inaccuracies. But I heard there was an inaccuracy in the description, in the voice-over, and I asked it to be withdrawn.

Because I abhor that kind of thing and I regret that kind of thing. Don't try to take it beyond where it is.

CLARK: What about deploring negative commercials anyway, why don't we just speak out on the issues?

MRS. ABZUG: Maybe you're right. It may be that that's not the best thing.

MOYNIHAN: It was a negative commercial.

MRS. ABZUG: No, it was not a negative commercial. What it really sought to do was to emphasize the point that there was this failure on the part of this candidate.

MOYNIHAN: Yes, it is true that I worked for President Nixon for two years and when I left in 1970 I made what I thought was a gracious and, in retrospect, I suppose, an excessively gracious statement goodbye.

MRS. ABZUG: Did you campaign against President Nixon with the rest of us?

MOYNIHAN: No, I did not. I had been a member of his Cabinet and I said I would not campaign against him. I specifically would not support him.

Q: What do you believe are the implications of defense cuts to our foreign policy?

MRS. ABZUG: We proposed a $3 billion to $7 billion cut that is essentially based upon what is acknowledged waste or savings that can be made in procurement and personnel and other things of that kind.

The future cuts would have to be based upon the valuation of the nature of the foreign policy that will be reassessed and re-evaluated under a Democratic Administration. Many people have thought that with the elimination of certain exotic weapons that are suggested we could make cuts of $14 billion.

And that would be based upon some suggestions that are also made in the Democratic platform, including an eventual withdrawal of our troops from Korea.

As far as the nation of Israel is concerned, we support economic and military assistance to Israel from a foreign assistance bill.

CLARK: I think we've asked a fundamental question of priorities. I think when people say they're against government waste they haven't said anything. I don't know of a person that's for waste. And $3 billion to $7 billion is what everybody talks about in terms of waste.

Armaments Race Insane

I think if America can't provide the leadership that will say the armaments race is insane, it's going to destroy the populations of this earth—we have the capacity to kill the populations 50 times over already.

We talk about eventually getting out of Korea; I think eventually should have been 10 years ago. We shouldn't be there.

In terms of Israel to say that we have to spend $1.4 billion for Israel to be safe is false and damaging to Israel.

HIRSCHFELD: I just came back from behind the Iron Curtain countries. I examined their might—It's far, far less than ours. In another 20 years they won't catch up with us.

As to the reduction on the military budget, I support in every respect Mr. Clark's position.

Now in relation to Israel, I am sick and tired of everybody catering to my people only when they need votes. I do stand for full support for Israel.

MOYNIHAN: I feel that the discus-

P Minus 6, Democratic Hopefuls for the Senate Step Up Campaigns

By LINDA GREENHOUSE

er debating all morning, the five Democratic candidates for the United States Senate nomination quickly dispersed yesterday to various corners of the State to pursue active campaigning schedules with six days to go before Sept. 14 primary.

The way to touring shopping centers in Nassau County and addressing a rally at night at Co-op City in the Bronx, Senator Bella S. Abzug paused in the Saudi Arabian mission to announce that she had cosponsored a resolution in the House of Representatives yesterday to disapprove some planned American arms sales to Arabia.

resolution, if it passes both houses by the end of the month, would forbid the sale of Maverick and other missiles as well as anti-tank weapons. Such armaments pose "a serious threat to peace in the Middle East," Mrs. Abzug said.

Manhattan Representative also addressed a rally of Government workers in the Plaza in lower Manhattan and to try again to repeal the Hatch Act which bans political activities by employees. President Ford vetoed of the 1939 law earlier this year.

Clark, another of the candidates in eight campaign stops in Manhattan released a position paper calling for expanded access to legal services.

Criticizes Bar Group

Clark, a former United States Attorney General, charged that lawyers had themselves beyond the reach of the wealthiest Americans. He said a lawsuit against the American Association's ban on the advertisers' fees and also called on the Association to drop its resistance to equal insurance.

Daniel P. Moynihan, the former United States delegate to the United Nations, flew to Buffalo for a series of rallies. His office announced the formation of "Educators for Moynihan" and "Health Professionals for Moynihan" committees, and it released a statement by the candidate calling for Federal aid to help individuals defend themselves against crime.

Among Mr. Moynihan's anticrime suggestions were Federal tax credits to encourage homeowners to install better locks and the inclusion of antiburglary features in housing built with Federal aid.

Paul O'Dwyer, the City Council President and another of the candidates, criticized Mr. Moynihan for not having raised the issue of alleged British mistreatment of imprisoned members of the Irish Republican Army while he was at the United Nations. Mr. O'Dwyer said that he had written to Mr. Moynihan on the subject during his United Nations tenure, but that he never got a reply.

The fifth candidate, Abraham Hirschfeld, a wealthy builder, accused Mrs. Abzug of responsibility for a "disastrous blow" to the city's economy of opposing Federal reconstruction of the West Side Highway. Mrs. Abzug said Mr. Hirschfeld's analysis was "totally wrong" because the decision on whether to go ahead with the highway project was up to Governor Carey and Mayor Beane and not up to her.

Ehrlichman Sentence Delayed

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (UPI)—Three judges on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit temporarily blocked today John D. Ehrlichman, former chief domestic adviser to President Nixon, to surrender to begin his prison term. The court stayed Federal District Judge Gerhard Gesell's order until Sept. 16. Mr. Ehrlichman was due to begin serving a 20-month to five-year sentence for ordering a break-in by White House "plumbers" at the office of Dr. Lewis, Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

For the Colonel, It Was Finger-Lickin' Bad

By MIMI SHERATON

A small boy, seated at a table in a Kentucky Fried Chicken store in Greenwich Village paled and almost dropped the extra-crispy drumstick he was about to bite into yesterday as he looked up and saw none other than the Kentucky Colonel himself, Harland Sanders, every inch his television image with flowing white hair, trim goatee and blazing white suit.

Looking over to the boy's mother who was managing a thin smile of disbelief, the colonel boomed, "Ah, madam, I bet you never thought it was true. But you, boy, you never doubted it, did you?"

And then he handed the child a signed photograph of himself.

Autographing buckets and boxes filled with the product he created, the colonel entered the kitchen without a by-your-leave. The manager of this company-owned unit, Thaddeus Singleton, looked up and, without batting an eye, said, "Come right in, colonel, you're always welcome here," little suspecting what was about to happen.

Criticizes Cooking of Chicken

This unannounced inspection visit to the Kentucky Fried Chicken store on the Avenue of the Americas near Eighth Street followed a pre-birthday luncheon for the colonel at the Coach House. Today the colonel's 86th birthday will be celebrated with a luncheon at "21." But driving back from lunch yesterday in the colonel's limousine, I noticed this Kentucky Fried store, at which I had purchased some of the worst fried chicken I've ever eaten in my life.

After hearing him expound on the origins of the chain of stores he had founded and his general unhappiness with it now that it is under the direction of Heublein, the company, I asked him to go into the store with me and see if his observations agreed with mine, and, if so, what was wrong.

Once in the kitchen, the colonel walked over to a vat full of frying chicken pieces and announced, "That's much too black. It should be golden brown. You're frying for 12 minutes—that's six minutes too long."

"That's the worst fried chicken I've ever seen," said the founder of Kentucky Fried Chicken when he visited one of its stores. And he also faulted the mashed potatoes and the cole slaw.

What's more, your frying fat should have been changed a week ago. That's the worst fried chicken I've ever seen. Let me see your mashed potatoes with gravy, and how do you make them?"

Colonel Called a "Purist"

When Mr. Singleton explained that he first mixed boiling water into the instant powdered potatoes, the colonel interrupted. "And then you have wallpaper paste," he said. "Next I suppose you add some of this brown gravy stuff and then you have sludge." "There's no way anyone can get me to swallow those potatoes," he said after tasting some. "And this cole slaw. This cole slaw! They just won't listen to me. It should be chopped, not shredded, and it should be made with Miracle Whip. Anything else turns gray. And there should be nothing in it but cabbage. No carrots!"

Mr. Singleton replied, "I just do what I'm told, Sir," and Colonel Sanders then said gently to the now-stunned manager, "Well, it's not your fault. You're just working for a company that doesn't know what it's doing."

"Too bad, because it gives you a bad reputation," he said by way of farewell.

Anthony Tortorel, director of public affairs for the Kentucky Fried Chicken division of Heublein, said later when reached by telephone, "We're very grateful to have the

He ordered black bean soup, which he thought should have been thicker and heavily laced with sherry instead of Madeira; mushrooms with chicken livers that he ordered pink, but which he did not like because they had been sautéed instead of crisply fried; a salad that he did like although he preferred French rousefort cheese to the feta used, and pecan pie, which he thought was not as good as one he made with lemon juice "to add life to the Karo syrup filling."

Of the Coach House fried chicken ("Give me the middle wing joint; it's the best part of the chicken"), his verdict was, "Very good, but it would be better with more salt and my seasoning." His favorite food of the day was the cornbread baked in sticks, of which he ate three and carried six back to his hotel. "That's the best cornbread I've ever had made by a Yankee up North," he declared to the waiter. "Not too much sugar or flour in the meal."

Refusing a glass of wine the colonel explained, "Wine tastes like gasoline, and now that I read about all the arsenic in California wines, I'm glad I don't drink it. I have 14 more years to go to finish the century and I want to take care of myself so I make it."

He explained that he was on a no-aging diet that required him to eat a can of sardines every morning.

Having traveled in 44 countries ("I'll never go to India. I don't want to see people sleeping in the colonel around to keep us on our toes, but he is a purist and his standards were all right when he was operating just a few stores. But we have over 5,500 now and that means more than 10,000 fry cooks of all ages and abilities.

"Raw chicken turns customers off, so we play it safe and fry at lower temperatures for a longer time than the colonel likes. And we think carrots add color and eye appeal to cole slaw."

"The Colonel has very high standards of personal conduct and for his products, but we need wider parameters to adapt to the real-life world. But I guarantee that if you go back into that store, you'll see a big improvement."

Chicken Rated by Expert

Colonel Sanders, who is paid $200,000 a year to do advertising and public relations for Kentucky Fried Chicken, expressed equally strong opinions on the meal at the highly esteemed Coach House as he discussed his interest in food.

streets"), the colonel prefers American food and most especially that of the Southeast. "We season our food more than folks in other parts of the country," he said. "I've never been struck by French food. Only the sauces are good. I never have a chance to eat in Italy any place but in a Hilton Hotel."

But he did add that he used to work for a German farmer as a teenager and did like German food.

Dislikes New Products

When asked what he thought of such new Kentucky Fried Chicken products as extra-crispy chicken and the barbecue-style ribs and chicken, he said, "Now why did you have to ask me that? They really 'bag me,' that's what I think of them."

And when told that many Kentucky Fried Chicken salesclerks packed hot chicken in buckets well in advance of its sale, he almost fumed. If they do that, he said, the chicken will have a terrible smell.

"You know, that company is just too big to control now," he said. "I'm sorry I sold it back in 1964. It would have been smaller now, but a lot better. People see me up there doing those commercials and they wonder how I could ever let such products bear my name. It's downright embarrassing."

For One Night, the Store's Elevators Served Drinks

By ENID NEMY

It isn't that John Schumacher has a literal mind. Things just worked out that way. On Labor Day, Mr. Schumacher was doing some unusual laboring; unusual, that is, for a chairman of the board.

He was running around the main floor of Bonwit Teller in jeans, if you can believe it, pushing racks, sorting merchandise and hanging clothes. As was Kai Ruttenstein, the president of the store; as were scores of other executives. That's the way it is in retailing when remodeling isn't quite finished, and a big fancy benefit opening is scheduled in less than 48 hours. Last night, although the first floor facelift wasn't quite finished, Mr. Schumacher and Mr. Ruttenstein were back looking like executives, slightly harried but so what?

Precise Arrangement

Bonwit Teller and some 700 men and women were doing their bit for The Museum of Modern Art (members were charged $10 for the evening, but the idea was new memberships and there were something like 150 of those, in addition to 25 new contributing members at $100 each). Several hundred of the guests were waiting on the red carpet outside the 57th Street entrance before the doors opened. When they did, there was what Westerners might call a stampede into what was once the cosmetics department and is now the Missoni Shop.

There, the colorful knits that have made Rosita and Ottavio Missoni status names, and the Missonis themselves, and assorted people from the store, were arranged as precisely as a military honor guard, except honor guards don't shake hands and wave and pucker lips, not to mention all the kissing that went on.

And then up a few little steps into the main area of the store and... bedlam. It seemed to be a satisfying sight to most everyone because the pushing and crowding and decibel level obviously meant they were attending a successful event.

There was Bobby Short playing the piano and singing, counters laden with goodies from The Party Box—bifid filled with sour cream, caviar brioche, sliced ham, raisin pumpernickel rolls—and Bonwit's way of getting high—stationary elevators, open, and outfitted as bars.

The Runway

But what's a new-look fashion store without a fashion show. Bonwit's wasn't going to supply that answer, so there was a show. First there had to be a runway.

The runway construction was finished while guests were milling around and although very few believed it, that's the way it was planned. The construction workers in their hard hats jostled and crashed around a bit as they fitted together the walkway, made from authentic scaffolding. They also made a lot of authentic noise, which faded into a serenade when the actual show took place.

At that point, the music, while not quite deafening, was what might be called authoritative, and there were, as well, colored lights that changed color and intensity, and did what colored lights are supposed to do. The models did what they were supposed to do and Mr. Ruttenstein dug into a big box that was wheeled on stage and came up with some Missoni scarves that were thrown to the audience and a lively looking model that wasn't fashion, art and society in all its graces.

The audience was a mixture of dations. Among those on hand were Blanche Rockefeller, Elizabeth Straus, Mary Darvel, Alva Gimbel, Lily Auchincloss, Isabel Leeds, Harriet Gasparian, Harold and Marjorie Reed, Donald and Jan Chipman, T. Sufferd and Jean Teller, Angier Biddle and Robin Duke, Richard Oldenburg, Judith and Gus Leiber, Ronald and Jo Carol Lauder, Donald Brooks, Victor Joris and Jerry Silverman. A few left early; Babe Paley left almost as soon as she arrived.

Doodads for Sale

Everyone else explored over the marble and carpeted floors, into the new cosmetics and accessories islands, and on into the Hunting World section with its little doodads, such as place mats at $75 a set, canvas and leather luggage at $325, and duffle and shopping bags at $95 to $185.

The big doodads weren't around, for a couple of reasons. The first was that the right display cases hadn't yet been installed and one doesn't lightly throw around $10,000 saddle leather luggage sets and $2,500 elephant hide desks sets. The second is that the Hunting World department is going to have its own official opening on Nov. 17, a benefit for the International Center for Photography. Some excitement had to be left for that.

Missoni show included colorful evening and contrasting styles.

Women Grapple With Depression—by Sharing It

By NADINE BROZAN

The mood outdoors on the sunny, hot afternoon was upbeat, with the post-Labor Day atmosphere that signifies the start of a new work year and all its potential for change.

Inside the Eastern Women's Center at 14 East 60th Street, some 80 women, from young professionals to widowed grandmothers, were grappling with the subject of "Overcoming Depression and Building Self-Esteem."

One woman wanted to know how to help a troubled male friend who phoned her for aid at 5 A.M. A recently widowed Jackson Heights matron came to see what salves could be offered for her grief. Lucille Lutzker of Brooklyn said, "I want to discuss middle-age. I'm almost 42, and I can't help but compare myself with the young. I go to the movies and every actress drops her clothes. I can drop my clothes but I don't look the same."

Yesterday's workshop, which was to be repeated last night, was conducted by Dr. Helen A. De Rosis, a psychoanalyst, psychotherapist and associate clinical professor of psychiatry at New York University School of Medicine, and Victoria Y. Pellegrino, a writer and director of a career counseling firm. They are the authors of "The Book of Hope: How Women Can Overcome Depression" (Macmillan, $9.95).

Although the seminar was clearly intended to promote the book, it drew a cross-section of women who had other things on their minds besides buying a self-help volume.

Mrs. Pellegrino explained that, "Sometimes in their lives eight out of every 10 women will suffer depression. It's an epidemic. Most of the time it is low-grade and goes unrecognized."

After summarizing briefly the components of depression, Dr. De Rosis told the audience, "We want you to give the answers through your own experiences."

And the experiences poured out, one after the other, starting with the plaint of one woman who said, "For the last 30 years, I've thought I would like to get married. I've been looking and looking. I go to dances, and it's so depressing. There's just no one around who would be a suitable husband or compatible."

She had struck a responsive chord. "It's the same thing the second time around," a woman in the back asserted. "You must decide that it's O.K. to be alone. But that's not saying that I'm able to do it."

Using the problem to demonstrate an approach to solution, Dr. De Rosis said, "You see how complex each issue is. What do you mean by marriage? You've used extreme terminology. Is it possible that your view of 'suitable' or 'compatible' is so out of line [of reality] that it is not possible?"

Marriage and the expectations invested in it by no means dominated the day. Members of the audience repeatedly demonstrated the authors' conviction that current pressures on women to pursue careers and success while rearing children and running households are inciting depression even as they liberate.

"On the face of it, I should be absolutely happy," said Judith Levine-Gerberg, an art therapist with a part-time appointment at Long Island University. "I have a 17-month-old daughter, a wonderful husband, an apartment in the city, a house in the country, a job at a college, but I feel very overwhelmed, as if I must be a superwoman."

The particular problem that had drawn Mrs. Levine-Gerberg to the session, she explained, "was that I notice I just can't get a housekeeper, and the reason I can't find a perfect housekeeper is that I have a feeling that my perfect daughter can only be cared for by a perfect me."

A 54-year-old mother of two grown children, who is an abstract painter and now wants to go into a commercial venture, said, "My husband has told me, 'It's great, go to it, dear, but where's my dinner?' After all, I work much harder than you do." He's all in favor of it, but he wants everything in our lives to go on being the same. "The only hope," another woman counseled her, "is a moment of truth when you realize that the problem is not his belly-aching but your own guilt." Another woman had a more pragmatic solution: "How about a crockpot?"

To combat many of the forms of depression described, the moderators agreed that the place to begin was with specific strategies. They could range from something as simple as going out for a Chinese dinner to something as demanding as scouring the job market without being cowed by rejection.

Asked if a one-shot seminar was not a bandage approach, Dr. De Rosis said, "Obviously you can't treat people in a workshop, but you can give them pointers to help them identify what is troubling them and give them alternate ways of coping. We can talk about the one small thing, the investment in which causes frustration and rage."

The program will be repeated for 75 people on Wednesday at 7 P.M. For reservations, call the center at 832-0033.

Buckley Says Tendency to Create Quota Society Threatens Nation

By THOMAS P. RONAN

James L. Buckley, the Conservative Republican incumbent, asserted yesterday that one of the great dangers to New York State and the nation is "the growing tendency of the well-meaning individuals in government to make ours a 'quota' society."

When asked recently why Mr. Buckley would not debate Mr. Peyster, a Buckley side-rep, he replied: "Why should we give that guy exposure?"

The Senator, who campaigned in Westchester and Rockland counties, said that affirmative action programs in nearly every sphere of employment and educational endeavor had provided the Federal Government with the mechanism for dealing with citizens not as individuals, but as members of groups.

"The ethnic surveys, goals, timetables and quotas, which have marked the affirmative action programs, have created animosity and not really contributed to equal opportunity," he said.

A bill he has introduced, he said, would reaffirm the Federal requirement that recipients of grants or contracts guarantee nondiscrimination on the basis of race, religion, color, national origin or sex, but would not allow the establishment of employment goals, timetables or quotas based on these criteria.

Sutton Gives His Backing To Mrs. Chisholm in Race With Wright in Brooklyn

Borough President Percy E. Sutton of Manhattan, who said he was "forced to decide between two valued friends," yesterday endorsed Representative Shirley Chisholm for re-election in Brooklyn's 12th Congressional District.

At a news conference in his Municipal Building office, Mr. Sutton said the endorsement was not made in "derogation" of her opponent, City Councilman Samuel Wright, who, Mr. Sutton said, was equally competent.

Mr. Sutton said he had made his choice on the basis of Mrs. Chisholm's seniority in the House, which would make her a force in Congress, he asserted.

"In selecting between Mr. Wright and Mrs. Chisholm, I am forced to decide between two valued friends, either of whom, if not in conflict with the other, would represent the district exceedingly well. But Mrs. Chisholm is in Congress; she does have meaningful power, and she does have the potential for advancement there. It is, therefore, for these reasons she should have my support."

When Mrs. Chisholm was asked if she would support Mr. Sutton for the mayoralty or as President of the City Council next year, she answered: "I would hope that he would run for the mayoralty next year and I will be there to give him my support."

Contractor Who Seeks $194,596 Pickets the Tavern-on-the-Green

By JUDY KLEMESRUD

Mr. Luciano, who on Sept. 2 filed a nonpayment suit against Mr. LeRoy with the American Arbitration Association, denied the charges that his company had been unable to complete the work at the tavern. He said that all of the work agreed upon in the contract had been finished by Aug. 2 and that any further work that Mr. LeRoy had wanted done was not shown on the original drawings, or consisted of "extras" not specified in the contract.

Mr. Luciano said that Mr. LeRoy had already paid him $440,167 and that $194,596 was still owed. The money is needed, Mr. Luciano said, to pay off 19 subcontractors, some of whom have filed lawsuits against him for money they are owed.

Disputing the contractor, the 42-year-old Mr. LeRoy said: "He had a contract to be finished by July 15, and he wasn't even close. On July 31, he still wasn't close, and my architect made up a list of unfinished items that ran to 11 pages, single-spaced. So we brought in new subcontractors."

Dorothy Balding Wed To William C. Jackson Jr.

Dorothy Davis Balding of Upper Brookville, L.I., and Aiken, S.C., was married yesterday morning to William Congreve Jackson Jr. of Aiken, where the bridegroom heads his own petroleum distribution company. The Rev. John Hascup performed the ceremony in the Upper Brookville Reformed Church.

The bride, a golfer who was the women's Long Island golfing champion in 1951, is the widow of John Bernard Balding, who as Barney Balding was a well-known polo player and horse trainer. She is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Davis of Brookville, L.I. Her father was head of the Island Creek Coal Company.

Mr. Jackson, whose previous marriage ended in divorce, is the son of Mrs. Jackson of Owings Mills, Md., and the late Mr. Jackson. He and his wife will live in Aiken.

Town Name Was Necessary

NECESSITY, Tex. (UPI)—Bureaucratic red tape is nothing new to this small Stephens County community. In the 1850's before the town was named, residents decided that a post office was essential and they petitioned the Federal Government for one. They argued that it was a "necessity," and the Government agreed, granted the request and named the post office "Necessity."

La Scala Presents a Strange 'Macbeth'

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7—How embarrassing. Before a distinguished audience of diplomats, legislators, musicians, critics (some 60 are in Washington for the Music Critics Association meeting) and other well-wishers, American technicians failed. The United States debut of the Teatro alla Scala from Milan was delayed Tuesday night almost an hour when the orchestra pit refused to be a pit. It was in the raised position and decided not to descend. Finally it did, as the Kennedy Center stage crew cranked it down by hand, inch by perspiring inch.

Some three hours later there were those unkind enough to say that the pit never should have gone down, or the curtain up. Verdi's "Macbeth" received a very strange performance. It was the aim of La Scala to start a little controversy, it did. Not on the Bayreuth order, perhaps—but, then again, nobody takes Verdi's "Macbeth" as seriously as Wagner's "Ring." It was clear, however, that the director, Giorgio Strehler, had certain concepts of the neo-Bayreuth style in mind, including prevalently dark lighting in which the singers' faces were obscured,

The Cast

MACBETH, opera in four acts by Giuseppe Verdi, text by Francesco Maria Piave after the play by William Shakespeare. Conducted by Claudio Abbado, staged by Giorgio Strehler. Designed by Luciano Demicheli. Presented by La Scala of Milan at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

and in an attempt to psychologize the opera. Thus the emphasis was on character rather than décor. There was a unit set of severe simplicity, nothing but copper burnished walls with slits in them. It had an unfortunate resemblance, color aside, to the underground garage of the center's neighboring Watergate Hotel, and much of the stage was completely bare. The audience is supposed to concentrate on the characters without being distracted by the silly scenery that Verdi was vulgar enough to specify.

As usual in this type of production, a good part of "Macbeth" might just as well have been a concert version. And when it was not a concert version, it was all too obvious. To show Macbeth's interior turmoil, the director had him on the floor more often than a Martha Graham dancer. There was an unconvincing mixture throughout of the opera of highly stylized movement next to naturalism.

The witch scenes lacked mystery and horror; the gimmick here was a billowing silk curtain, supposed to suggest the nether world. Or something: Macbeth and Lady Macbeth wore immensely long trains that followed them around like hungry boa constrictors. Presumably this was to represent royalty. There was no ghost of Banquo. Directors today do not believe in ghosts; rather it was a procession of faces. Lady Macbeth enters not reading her husband's letter, but bearing it in his voice through prerecorded tape.

In short this "Macbeth" was one of those operations in which the director, eager to "interpret," usurps the function of the composer. This was a "Macbeth" full of gimmicks but without real style, imagination or substance. One wonders why La Scala is so proud of it. For proud the company must be to make it the occasion for an American debut.

'Country Over Manhattan' At Rainbow Grill Features 'Rural' City-Slicker Acts

By JOHN S. WILSON
The Rainbow Grill, in a departure from its customary booking policies, is making its first exploration of country music during the next three weeks. It is a rather parochial effort because the five groups involved in the "Country Over Manhattan" engagement have been recruited from O'Leary's, the Second Avenue country-music club, and all are New York bred or based.

But if the musicians themselves are New Yorkers, the music and the mood are Southern and Southwestern. Michael Simmons, a 21-year-old singer and guitarist whose quiet, slow-footed, will be at the grill for the entire three weeks (the other groups come in for a few nights each) wears a black cowboy hat in the manner of one of his idols, Wayne Jennings. He concedes that he got the hat on 42d Street. "Where else do you get cowboy hats?" he asks.

GOING-OUT Guide

IRISH Brendan Behan's "The Hothouse" has been tackled before in New York since it was first produced in London 18 years ago. The results have been somewhat uneven. The New York Times drama critic, Clive Barnes, said in 1972 that the City Center Acting Company's choice of repertory was "courageous" and in presenting "The Hothouse" he said that "the courage savored of foolhardy."

AUSTRIAN The "Doppelsextett Velden" is a vocal ensemble from Austria, the province of Carinthia, actually. Founded in 1953, by Hans Kraschi, now its chorus master, the double sextet has performed its Austrian and foreign folk songs, madrigals, spirituals and religious works in many places. Today, dressed in their traditional costumes, they will sing and dance at the Lower Plaza in Rockefeller Center.

Paris Opera's Opening in U.S. Is a Very French Event

By RICHARD F. SHEPARD
The Paris Opera made its American debut last night at the Metropolitan Opera House before an audience as large as New York's entire population in 1693, when the French opera company was created and New York was only a small, young, English colony.

Before the house darkened and the performance brought the audience to its feet with the playing of the Marseillaise and the Star-Spangled Banner, there was a spate of activity both out front and backstage.

A capable cast gave a comfortable glow to the first "Marriage of Figaro" of the young New York City Opera season. Production values were in good order at the New York State Theater on Tuesday night, the ensemble numbers came off with reasonable precision, and while the performances never really caught fire, they stated Mozart's case with gentle charm.

Judge Rules N.F.L. Draft Is Illegal

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (UPI)—A Federal judge struck down the National Football League's annual draft of college players today on grounds it violated Federal antitrust laws.

The decision by United States District Judge William B. Bryant upheld the claim by Jim (Yazoo) Smith, a first-round selection by the Washington Redskins in 1967, that the draft illegally restrained his right to bargain effectively because it bound him to only one N.F.L. team.

Bryant's ruling was expected to be appealed to higher Federal courts by the N.F.L. but his decision in the case heard, without a jury was a severe shock to pro football's hierarchy.

The former Oregon star claimed the draft was an illegal restraint of trade because it denied him the opportunity to bargain effectively with the Redskins, who held sole right to his services.

Connors and Vilas Move to Semifinals

By NEIL ANDRUS

The last time they met, four years ago, they were teenagers searching for a small slice of the pie. Now Jimmy Connors has two bodyguards, Guillermo Vilas is heavy into poetry and they will meet in the semifinals of the United States Open tennis championships...

tona Beach, Fla., who did a lot of lobbying, under a wave of overheads, 6-1, 6-3. Although they have played in all the world's major championships, Connors and the 24-year-old Vilas have not traded southpaw strokes since Jimmy beat the Argentine in Cincinnati four summers ago...

The Nastase Phenomenon

It's not Wimbledon but the colonists are trying. At the United States Open tennis championships at Forest Hills, the concession stands offer strawberries and blueberries with Devonshire cream. Quiche, with bacon and Gruyere, is available; also knockwurst steamed in beer on fluted bread with caraway sauerkraut.

sounded as if he were deferring to Nastase rather than risk another spontaneous combustion. At the start of the fifth set, the Rumanian complained about lights shining out of the CBS television booth, Irwin requested them to be turned off. They were.

The New York Times/Meyer Lubovitz Nastase, acquired from Denver, Jets' Hofstra came.

Other tennis players, notably Jimmy Connors, occasionally inject emotion into a match, but Ilie Nastase always supplies passion. In his big years, Pancho Gonzales created a passionate atmosphere. He turned a tennis match into a torrid romance. But with Ilie Nastase, it's as if he were playing tennis while committing a crime of passion.

But tennis no longer needs desperately to sell tickets. It needs mostly now to police itself. If the politicians and the players won't do it, the tournament officials must. But the tournament officials know that Ilie Nastase sells tickets. And so he is not defaulted.

there that meant he probably wouldn't pitch me.
"I don't know if it's entirely his fault or not. George Steinbrenner might've told him not to put me in. I could believe that. George wants to win, and if I'm going lousy, he doesn't want me in there."
Lyle had recorded 20 saves, but was ineffective in several consecutive appearances last month. He never would have disclosed his feelings about Martin, he said, but was prompted to speak out by the manager's telling newsmen more than once that he told the reliever "in a roundabout way" how he planned to use him or not use him.
"I don't know what his roundabout way is," the left-hander said. "He hasn't said anything to me. I just think it could've been handled in a different way."
"I would've felt a lot better if he had come up to me and said, 'You're throwing lousy. We're trying to win this thing and until you show you're out of it, I'm only going to use you in games we're losing because the other guys are going well.' That's better than beating around the bush and saying, 'Well, I'm planning on using you.'"
As well as Figueroa did last night, though, Martin would have to use relievers. Figueroa walked only one man and four of the four baserunners advanced past first.
Three Brewer pitchers had no such luck. Munson doubled home a run in the fourth and scored on a single by Lou Piniella. Nettles, the league's leading home-run hitter, then hit his 26th. In the fifth Roy White singled across a run and Munson knocked in another with a grounder. Randolph, back at second base with his sore right knee, singled home a run in the sixth and Otto Velaz, Figueroa's fellow Puerto Rican, hit a two-run homer in the eighth.

Velaz played the outfield because Mickey Rivers's legs were sore and Elliott Maddox's surgical right knee was tender. Ron Blomberg played for the first time since July 12, 1975, and grounded out weakly twice.

Hearing Resumes Today On Suspended Players

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Sept. 8 (UPI)—A federal judge has called for testimony to resume tomorrow on a suit by six suspended Michigan State University football players seeking reinstatement in time for Saturday's season opener against Ohio State.
United States District Judge Noel P. Fox heard lengthy testimony today from M.S.U. athletic officials and National Collegiate representatives on an N.C.A.A. investigation of recruiting violations at the Big Ten school.
Four of the six players are potential starters. They are the Spartans' No. 1 quarterback, Eddie Smith; a defensive lineman, Larry Betha; a tight end, Michael Cobb; and a defensive back, Joe Hunt.
The suit charges that the N.C.A.A., the Big Ten and the M.S.U. athletic council denied the players' constitutional rights to due process in handing down the suspensions.

The stock market encountered profit taking pressures yesterday after its recent strong advance and closed mixed in accelerated trading.

At the conclusion of trading, the Dow Jones industrial average was off 3.65 points to 992.94. Its low for the session was registered at noon, when the key index was down 4.65 points.

Composite trading in all issues listed on the New York Stock Exchange rose to 23.26 million shares from 19.03 million shares on Tuesday.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 — Imperial Chemical Industries, Britain's second-largest company after the British Petroleum Company, has admitted to the Securities and Exchange Commission it had made $2.4 million in questionable payments since 1972, according to a document filed here late last week and made available by a commission official today.

There were no illegal political contributions anywhere in the world, the company's investigation showed, and no questionable payments were made in North America, Europe (except for one "minor" occasion in a Southern European country), Japan or what is described as "Australia."

An indecisive market is no excuse for indecisive planning.

Earlier this year, an economy which had been ailing developed vigorously improved vital signs. But many investors became apprehensive, deciding that inflation fever would return.

Then when economic moderation did occur, many feared the patient might be dying.

A more consistent investor, less subject to short-term jitters, may well find today the optimum time to act. Sound values, probable dividend increases and good growth prospects do exist.

The Kidder, Peabody strategy report for September is especially relevant. It isolates an industry and selected issues therein whose stock prices, we believe, have not yet reached to the improving outlook for the industry, and currently appear poised to do so in strength.

Send for your copy of our informative report today. It's a tool for decisive planning.

$100 Preferreds vs. $25 Par Issues

By ROBERT MEYER

Some investors in preferred stocks have been puzzled by the fact that $25 par value issues yield about a quarter of a percentage point less than more traditional $100 preferreds issued by the same company.

Does this mean then that $100 preferreds are, well, preferable? Probably not. That, at least, is the opinion of Allan McAlpin, an authority on preferred stocks and vice president of Legg Mason/Wood Walker, who commented on the point and several others of interest to preferred-shareholders in a recent interview.

Mr. McAlpin says that the individual investor who buys $100 preferreds soon discovers that the yield premium comes at the cost of liquidity. That is, the higher-yielding $100 preferreds are not so easy to trade as the $25 preferreds. He says, therefore, that the small investor who buys a few $100 preferreds may discover that he will not sell them as easily as he would in a similar investment in $25 preferreds if he sells within a year or so of purchase.

Mr. McAlpin says that criticism of $25 preferreds on a relative yield basis tends to ignore the marketability factor—probably because that factor is irrelevant in many trades. Institutions can trade their $100 preferreds at better prices than those commanded by individuals, because they have bigger positions. In effect, then, the market for $100 preferreds is basically institutional in size and scope.

The $25 par value preferred was created with the individual in mind, Mr. McAlpin suggests. The nation's utilities took the lead in offering the $25 preferred during a recent bear market, a time when the sale of new common shares would have meant dilution since the new shares would tend to carry prices below the utility's book value.

Here is a list of preferred stocks—one $25 issue and the other a $100 issue—for each company representative. The list, which Mr. Alpin prepared, indicates the higher yields available in the current market for the $100 par value issues.

Company	Issue*	Yield*	Issue*	Yield*
Commonwealth Edison	(12.40)	7.85	(12.40)	7.85
Consumers Power	(12.40)	7.85	(12.40)	7.85
N.Y. State Elec. & Gas	(12.40)	7.85	(12.40)	7.85
Public Service Elec. & Gas	(12.40)	7.85	(12.40)	7.85
So. Cal. Edison	(12.40)	7.85	(12.40)	7.85

Mr. McAlpin believes that investors with conservative objectives who understand the limits of preferred shares can earn high yields while benefiting from the preferreds' cumulative dividends and senior status. He believes that the generally limited marketability of all preferreds is an acceptable factor for many who would otherwise buy common stocks of a sort not likely to increase dividends.

On the other hand, investors must consider quality a major factor in that there has been a "proliferation" of late in low-quality preferreds—those rated Baa or Baa by Moodys or BBB or BB by Standard and Poors.

It is not uncommon for issuing corporations to pay dividends on common shares in amounts that would reduce sums available to the preferred holders in a liquidation, Mr. McAlpin said. He noted that some utilities made "returns of capital" payments to common shareholders to one degree or another. To the extent that capital is returned, the utility's retained earnings account is diminished. The money so dispersed would otherwise be available to protect preferred shareholders in case of a major setback or possible reorganization of the issuing company.

Mr. McAlpin said that the Long Island Lighting Company, Boston Edison and Detroit Edison, among the utilities, had paid common dividends in excess of current earnings recently and had, thus, reduced earnings accounts.

He does not regard those payments as having jeopardized the dividends or safety of the preferreds of the three utilities, but believes that further payouts in excess of earnings pose a potential threat, should these and similarly situated utilities face financial hardship in the future.

Mexico Begins Exports Offensive With Biggest Fair in San Antonio

By ALAN RIDING

Special to The New York Times

SAN ANTONIO, Sept. 8—A week after effectively devaluing its currency by almost 40 percent, Mexico has begun an offensive to increase its exports to the United States by holding its largest-ever trade fair in this southwestern American city.

Although MexFair '76 has been held here annually since 1972 and was planned long before last week's decision to devalue the peso, this year's exhibition is being used specifically to emphasize the new competitiveness of Mexican products.

To give weight to the occasion, Mexico's President, Luis Echeverria Alvarez, flew here yesterday to inaugurate the exhibition of several thousand products from more than 750 companies, ranging from sophisticated electronic goods to delicate handmade artisan ware.

"The reactivation of the United States economy has opened new trade opportunities for Mexico," the President said, "which is why we are exhibiting our most characteristic products at a time when the monetary adjustments we have made make the prices of our articles more attractive."

Gains From Preferences

The United States, already the purchaser of more than 60 percent of Mexican exports, is seen as the customer most likely to absorb enough new exports to justify the drastic decision to abandon the peso's 32-year-old fixed parity with the dollar.

Addressing yesterday's opening session, Frederick Dent, a special envoy from President Ford pointed out that Mexico was also in a position to benefit from the American system of trade preferences, which had freed 2,734 products from import duties.

Mexico has traditionally suffered a trade deficit with the United States, but this deficit has grown dramatically from $227 million in 1971 to $2,478 billion last year despite recent Mexican oil sales to the United States.

Part of the reason for this increased deficit was that while the United States suffered a sharp reduction of economic activity during the last 18 months, the Mexican Government continued its own rapid rate of spending on large infrastructural projects that contained a high port content.

On the other hand, Mexican exports to the United States grew only 7 percent last year, and their prices reflected the relatively high rate of inflation that has afflicted Mexico since 1973.

The uncertainty caused by the country's first devaluation has so far led many Mexican companies to execute crunched over calculators trying to work out the impact on their production costs of a new wave of local inflation and an anticipated national wage increase before establishing their new price scales.

"We're going to quote the same dollar price as before until we know what price the peso levels," a text vendor said. "If the price is good, we may then be able to drop our dollar prices, but we must first know how much our raw materials are going to cost now."

Fearing that many Mexican companies would use the devaluation as an opportunity to channel their profits out of the collapse of the peso, the Government yesterday announced new export taxes of 7.5 percent on manufactured goods and 20 percent on raw materials.

Angry Reaction to Taxes

Many Mexican exhibitors at the fair already fearing a new wage and price spiral of inflation, reacted angrily to the new taxes, arguing that their companies might end up worse off than before.

Jorge Sanchez Mejerada, president of Mexico's Chamber of Industries said: "They shouldn't impose export taxes until they see what goods are being most exported."

He noted that not only were new taxes being imposed, but fiscal incentives had also been withdrawn and wages and prices were rising.

But Mr. Sanchez Mejerada noted that Mexican exports were already rising this year thanks to recovery of the United States economy and that this trend should be accelerated in the coming months. But like so many exhibitors here, he added that "everything will depend on what happens to wages and prices at home."

Double-A Electric Utilities Poised To Test Lowest Yields in 2 Years

By VARTAN G. VARTAN

A key sector of the corporate bond market—double-A rated electric utilities—is poised to test today its lowest yields in two years as a result of fundamentally favorable conditions for fixed-income securities. Expected to reach the public at prices to yield 8.45 percent is a $60 million, 30-year issue of Public Service Electric and Gas bonds.

Heading the group for this underwriting of "Peggy's," as the company is known in the bond trade, is Merrill Lynch.

Such a yield, dealers said, would provide the lowest return for a double-A utility since the early part of 1974, when an Oklahoma Gas and Electric issue came out at 8 1/2 percent.

Underwriters will also offer 2 million shares of preferred stock of the company serving most of New Jersey's larger cities at $25 a share. Carrying a dividend of $2.175, the single-A rated preferreds will yield 8.7 percent.

Meanwhile, an issue of relatively low-rated utility bonds was won yesterday in competitive bidding by First Boston and associates. Appalachian Power's $70 million of 30-year bonds were reoffered to yield 9.45 percent.

Last night, the issue known in Wall Street as "Apples," was reported as "35 percent sold." Interest among buyers was said to include insurance companies and pension funds, as well as retail accounts.

The winning bid was 99.138 for 9 1/2 percent coupons. These bonds are rated Baa by Moody's and triple-B-minus by Standard & Poors.

"Credit markets generally have an even to firm tone in very light trading yesterday," he added.

Also expected for public offering today is $50 million of 10-year notes for Montgomery Ward Credit, an issue rated Baa by Moody's and BBB by Standard & Poors. Kidder, Peabody heads the underwriting.

The size of this issue is being increased from the original $40 million, trade sources said, because of the favorable rate for subordinated notes.

New York Telephone said it had filed for authority to offer $150 million of 30-year debentures for competitive bidding about Oct. 19.

The subsidiary of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company cited its intention to use the sale proceeds for the possible redemption of its $150 million issue of 9 1/2 percent, 40-year refunding mortgage bonds.

If the issue is redeemed, it is expected that the redemption date will be about Dec. 1, 1976, at which date the redemption price will be 109.44 percent of the principal amount.

On Tuesday, another triple-A-rated subsidiary of A.T. & T., New Jersey Bell Telephone, announced plans to sell a new $100 million debenture issue to refund $100 million of 9.35 percent debentures marketed in June 1970. The new sale is set for Sept. 21.

In an interview, Henry Kaufman, the economist of Salomon Brothers, said there was "a distinct possibility" that the Federal Reserve would lower its rate target for Federal funds below 5 1/2 percent some time this month.

The key figures to watch, Mr. Kaufman said, are weekly retail sales and the data for industrial production, scheduled for release next Wednesday.

"Politically, it would be good tactics not to lower the Federal funds target four weeks before the Nov. 2 Presidential election," he added.

Thus, his rationale is that if the target on Federal funds—the basic short-term interest rate in the money market—is to be lowered, the move would come in September, rather than in October.

In the tax-exempt sector, prices continued to improve for segments of New York-related issues. The Alexander Central School District in Jefferson County in upstate New York sold $1,999 million of bonds to a group led by Adams, McEntee & Company, which put a 7.20 percent interest rate on the issue. The bonds are rated Baa-1 by Moody's but are not insured against default.

The bonds were priced to give investors yields scaled from 4.50 percent in 1977 up to 7.40 percent in 1995. About two-thirds of the issue was sold yesterday. The preceding such issue, sold on June 9, carried a 7.90 percent rate.

Shareholders of Cornfeld's Crumbled IOS Will Be Paid $3.50, Touche, Ross Says

TORONTO, Sept. 8. (Reuters)—Thousands of people who put their money into Bernard Cornfeld's Investors Overseas Service (IOS) in the 1960's only to see the financial empire crumble will get some of their money back.

The accounting firm of Touche, Ross & Company, which handled liquidation of the IOS Growth Fund, said here today that an initial distribution of $3.50 would be made for each share in the fund held by thousands of investors around the world.

The fund is one of the last vestiges of the IOS group, which had $2 billion in assets at its peak in 1969.

Touche, Ross said the payout, totalling $2.5 million, would be distributed on Sept. 15.

The company said it had tracked down 5,059 of the 5,649 known shareholders since IOS went into liquidation. Of these, 4,314 will get the dividend next week. Others must wait for their claims to be cleared.

The company said in a statement on the payout that a second distribution might be made in 1977.

While most of the IOS Growth Fund holders are in Western Europe, particularly West Germany, there are other holders in Britain, the United States and Canada.

Touche, Ross noted in the statement that at one time there were 143 companies in the IOS group, but it did not say how much of the original assets were on the books now. A year ago an international committee looking into IOS said it had salvaged assets totalling only $180 million.

from Mars ...brought to you by Hazeltine

All the Viking black-and-white and color pictures of Mars, being shown on TV in this country and around the world, were generated by digital display equipment developed and built by Hazeltine

In addition to feeding the TV networks, Hazeltine equipment at Jet Propulsion Laboratory is also providing high-precision displays and photographic prints of the Mars terrain for detailed analysis by the team of scientists at JPL.

Hazeltine is particularly proud to be part of this extraordinary Mars project. For Hazeltine was one of the pioneers of digital display techniques in the late 1950s and developed them over the ensuing years to their present high state of sophistication.

Hazeltine digital display systems work with any conventional digital computer, converting digital data from the computer into black-and-white and color displays of alphanumeric symbols, graphic lines, curves, and maps, and photographic-quality images. Each system, which has the capability of changing image detail, typically contains many local and remote TV monitor displays and large screen displays.

Part of Space Program Since 1960s
Hazeltine digital display systems have been part of our nation's space program since the early 1960s—at NASA's Kennedy, Johnson, Coddard, and Marshall Space Flight Centers. Hundreds of displays in these systems are integral parts of NASA's monitoring and control networks for spacecraft launching and for in-flight operation of manned and unmanned space flights. In addition, Hazeltine displays provide detailed color image and analysis data for NASA's earth resources and weather research programs and for structural evaluation of the new Space Shuttle.

New York Area Air Traffic Control
Since 1968, a Hazeltine digital display system has been at the heart of the Federal Aviation Administration's Air Traffic Control system for the skies over the New York metropolitan area—encompassing all air routes, holding areas, and approach lanes for Kennedy, La Guardia, and Newark airports. This installation, which was the world's first of its kind, replaced separate traffic control installations in the control towers at each of the three airports.

Airborne Command and Control Systems
Hazeltine has developed and is building the command and control displays for the U.S. Air Force E-3A Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) for which Boeing Aerospace Company is prime contractor. Utilizing digital display technology, the Hazeltine AWACS real-time situation displays provide the command and control officers with a versatile means for efficient battle management in tactical air situations.

Hazeltine also produces the displays for the E-2C "Hawkeye" early warning and control aircraft being built by Grumman Aerospace for the Navy. Its tactical situation displays are used by Naval commanders to direct and control air and ship operations.

Other Applications
Hazeltine has also delivered digital display systems for many other applications, including over-the-horizon radar, harbor collision avoidance, industrial oil processing, communications, military training, and scientific research.

Computer Terminal Equipment
In 1970, Hazeltine adapted its expertise in digital displays to the commercial computer terminal market, with the introduction of the "Hazeltine 2000", which quickly became the market leader and virtual standard in its class. Brand preference surveys consistently show Hazeltine to be "number one" with data processing professionals.

In 1975, more than 150 Hazeltine terminals were installed and are currently operating in various offices on Capitol Hill, providing congressmen and senators with information retrieved through computers from the Library of Congress.

With the introduction of "Modular One" at the beginning of 1976, Hazeltine took another major step forward in the application of digital display technology for business and industry.

The latest expression of video terminal leadership from the Company with more teletypewriter-compatible terminals installed than any other company in the world, "Modular One" has established new standards of reliability, performance and value, and is fast becoming the new standard in its class for end-users and systems manufacturers alike.

With the new "Modular One" computer terminal, Hazeltine is better able today than ever before to serve the informational needs of businesses, hospitals, schools, government agencies, banks, brokers and the professions . . . in this country and around the world.

ORD TO RAISE PRICE OF ITS NEW MODELS

Chairman Says Increase Will Be Only Slightly Below Advance General Motors Announced

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS
Special to The New York Times
DEARBORN, Mich., Sept. 8—The Ford Motor Company plans to raise prices on 1977 models by almost, but not quite, as much as the General Motors Corporation's 5.9 percent increase, Henry Ford chairman of the company, said today.

Mr. Ford announced two weeks ago that a 5.9 percent rise amounted to an average increase of $338 a car when optional equipment typically selected by consumers was included. That will raise the "icker price" of the average G.M. car more than $6,000.

The Ford average, however, is expected to be somewhat lower because it processes a smaller proportion of expensive, bigger cars than does G.M. Mr. Ford said at his company's prices had not yet been fully determined, but that they could be "in the area" of half a percentage point less than the General Motors increase. He said a formal announcement would come later this month.

Steel Not to Affect Prices
The price of Ford autos would not be significantly affected by the steel industry's recent deferral of its price increases, the company chairman said. He explained that the deferral, from October to January, would save Ford only $3 a vehicle when prorated over a model year.

In Washington, President Ford expressed hope today that United States car manufacturers would rescind recently announced price rises for 1977 models, Reuters reported.

In other matters arising at a news conference held here in connection with the production of Ford's 1977 models, the Ford chairman also said that he did not see "any reason why there should be a strike" when Ford's contract with the United Automobile Workers expires next Tuesday. He added that 1977 "could be the best sales year we have ever had."

Mr. Ford said the company planned to increase capital spending by $400 million, to $1.3 billion, in 1977; and to more than $2 billion a year in 1978, 1979 and 1980. He said that he was "leaning" toward Henry Carter as his personal choice for president. Mr. Ford has spoken favorably about Mr. Carter before, and supported him in the Michigan Democratic primary last May.

President Hopes for Price Cut
WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (Reuters)—President Ford indicated today his hope that United States car manufacturers would rescind recently announced price rises for 1977 models.

He was asked at a news conference whether he planned to put pressure on car makers to reduce prices after announcements by steel makers that they would rescind price rises, on rolled flat steel.

"I would hope that the auto makers would take it into account," he said, "asked whether he would specifically apply pressure, he said, "I believe that wholesome competition could sort it out."

port was "bargaining status." For occupations covered by collective bargaining agreements, the second-quarter rise was 1.8 percent, against 1.6 percent for the unorganized. For the nine months that the series has been compiled, the increases were 6 percent in organized industries and 5.4 percent elsewhere.

Eventually, the Employment Cost Index will include farm workers and nonwage compensation, including changes in costs of vacations, holidays and employer contributions for pensions, health, welfare and other benefits.

The bureau portrays the Employment Cost Index as a sister to the Consumer Price Index, a series that will yield a single number for the cost of "a standardized mix of labor services, much like the fixed weight market basket" of consumer goods and services.

Just as an economist can find in the fine print of the monthly Consumer Price Index breakdowns for clothing, food and medical services, so business managers will be able to find in the quarterly employment cost reports breakdowns that show trends in their industrial category and region. Such comparisons presumably will give management a more certain feel for its competitive standing and for the adequacy of its effort to control costs.

Closely to these trends have been available from such Bureau of Labor Statistics series as average hourly earnings, collective bargaining settlements and industrial and area wage studies. But the bureau says that these series do not produce the kind of cross-section detail that the new Employment Cost Index will make possible.

How much detail is published for benefits will depend, officials say, on whether the bureau can expand the present sample of 2,000 employers and how high the response rate. Responses are voluntary.

Strong Surge Shown In Output Per Worker

per worker. The 4.5 percent gain in the 12 months to mid-year for private business employees was just the kind of lift that a recovery phase of the business cycle usually brings, maybe a bit more.

The Congressional Budget Office provides a broader perspective on this figure in "Sustaining a Balanced Expansion," its latest report on the economy. Noting that "rising productivity, or output per worker, is the main source of increases in living standards," the report says, "it is a cause for some concern that in recent years productivity has been growing less rapidly than in the past."

In the 1970's, the report says, there has been "a marked slowdown" in comparison with the two previous decades. From 3.2 percent a year in 1955, average annual growth in output per worker eased to 2.7 percent in 1955-65, 2.4 percent in 1965-70 and 1 percent in 1970-75.

The report acknowledges what environmentalists have contended, that the figures are misleading to the extent they omit the nonproduct benefits of pollution control and greater on-the-job safety and health protection.

Nevertheless, outlays for such purposes are seen by the Congressional Budget Office as a diversion of capital funds from investments that expand output per worker directly.

The report lists other causes of a slowdown in growth of the capital-labor ratio—factors such as output shifts toward services and the downward swing in the age makeup of the labor force as many children reached working age.

The Congressional Budget Office also found that "improving productivity is not at present a major goal of national policy." In fact, it said, there is now "no general agreement that it should become a major goal."

If the country and the Government accept slow growth of productivity as the cost of environmental and worker protection, then business and Governmental force will pay even greater attention to cost trends and presumably to the new index of employment costs.

STRIKE POSES THREAT TO BRITAIN'S ECONOMY

Seamen Union's Walkout in Defiance of Government Could Cause Severe Damage to Recovery Efforts

Special to The New York Times
BRIGHTON, England, Sept. 8—Britain's effort to rebuild its economy through a policy of severe wage restraint received a potentially crippling blow today when the National Seamen Union called a nationwide strike over a wage dispute.

The move was the first act of outright defiance against the Government's strategy, and could cause serious economic and political repercussions.

The decision to strike was taken by the union's 15-member executive committee meeting in London, and followed by 48 hours a strike vote by the union's rank and file membership. The strike is scheduled to begin on Saturday. Late this afternoon, Prime Minister James Callaghan summoned Albert Booth, Minister for Employment, and other cabinet officials to 10 Downing Street to discuss the action. And here in Brighton where the Trades Union Congress is holding its annual conference, senior union officials made plans to meet early tomorrow to discuss the possibility of persuading the seamen to change their minds.

Some union officials here found hope in the fact that the seamen's vote was very close. Only 15,133 men, of a membership of around 40,000, cast their votes. The majority in favor of industrial action was only 309.

Pound Feels Pressure
LONDON, Sept. 8 (AP)—The British pound came under considerable pressure today after the National Union of Seamen called a strike for higher wages than the Government allows.

However, the Bank of England intervened almost constantly during the day to keep the pound from falling below $1.77.

Dealers could not say exactly how much support the Bank of England gave to the pound in the spot market, but said it must have been considerable. The pound ended at $1.7714, about unchanged from yesterday.

Gold closed in London at $111.50 an ounce, up from $110.50 the day before. The dollar ended at 2.5176 West German marks, down from 2.5223 yesterday. The United States currency also eased slightly against the French franc to 4.9235 from 4.9280 after trading considerably higher during the day. The dollar fell against the Benelux currencies and lira. However, it was almost stationary against the Swiss franc at 2.4815, compared with 2.4810.

In European trading for the yen, the dollar eased slightly to 287.65 from 287.77.

Italy Asks Fewer Auctions
ROME, Sept. 8, (Reuters)—Italy has asked the International Monetary Fund to hold its gold auctions less frequently because they are pushing down world prices, senior Government officials said today. Ranking sources said France is supporting Italy in her request and the matter would be discussed at a meeting of the Common Market monetary committee in Copenhagen on Friday.

Simon Bestows 'Legacy' In Tricentennial Capsule

The tricentennial is fast upon us, at least at the Treasury Department where Secretary William E. Simon dedicated a time capsule yesterday to be opened 100 years from now.

"The greatest legacy that can be passed on to Americans of 2076," Mr. Simon instructed his tricentennial counterpart, "is the vibrant heritage of a free people," which he called America's "greatest resource."

The capsule, which is 42 inches tall, will be on view in the day its contents are disclosed. They include, among other things, messages from President Ford and Mr. Simon, the latter restating his economic policy goals; photographs of the Treasury Building and offices of key officials within it; a red, white and blue telephone and a Treasury telephone directory; three flags—United States, Bicentennial and Treasury—and a Treasury seal; a sample from Secretary Simon's trip book; a proof set of Bicentennial coins and America's first pewter medals; a savings bond campaign necktie; a $2 bill and a $25 Bicentennial savings bond, which, in 2076—at current 6 percent interest rates—should be worth $8,925.42.

David S. Lewis, chairman and president of the General Dynamics Corporation, said in a letter to shareholders and employees this week that the company expected to become equity owner of seven tanker ships for liquefied natural gas, which it was building at its shipyards in Quincy, Mass. Mr. Lewis was referring to seven tankers the company has been building for the British Oil Company of Britain whose commitments for Federal backing have recently come under scrutiny by the Federal Government.

Mr. Lewis said General Dynamics expects Government approval for financing the ships before the end of the year, adding that the company would become equity owner of the tankers subject to the availability of guaranteed financing under Government Title XI. He called the move toward equity ownership "a very attractive earnings opportunity for our company."

Marjorie V. N. Whitman, an economics professor at the University of Pittsburgh, has been nominated as the first woman director of the Procter and Gamble Company. The nomination of Mrs. Whitman, a former member of the President's Council of Economic Advisors, is the first for a woman in Procter and Gamble's 139-year history. The nomination will be voted on at the company's annual shareholders meeting scheduled for Oct. 12 in Cincinnati.

James W. Davant, board chairman and chief executive officer of Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis, the brokerage firm, said yesterday that he was also assuming the additional posts of president and chief operating officer currently held by A. Jones Yorke. Mr. Yorke, who is 45 years old, was named vice chairman to succeed Albert Pratt, who retired at 65 in May. Mr. Davant, 58, a director of the New York Stock Exchange, said he had appointed John F. Curley Jr., 37, to assist him in administrative matters. Mr. Curley, a 1962 graduate of the Harvard School of Business Administration, will continue as executive vice president, but sources close to Paine Webber said the executive was "being groomed for a senior position."

Mr. Yorke joined Paine Webber in 1973 from the Securities and Exchange Commission where he had been executive director. He became president in April 1974.

JOB CHANGES: Kenneth Mason, 54, executive vice president-grocery products, the Quaker Oats Company, has been named president and chief operating officer. He succeeds Robert D. Stuart Jr., 60, who was elected chairman and will continue as chief executive officer. The company has not previously had a chairman's office. John D'Arcy, 60, and Augustin S. Hart Jr., 61, senior vice presidents, have been elected vice chairman of the company. Jack L. Bowers, 56, who has been serving as Assistant Secretary of the Navy since June 1973, has been named president and chief operating officer of Sanders Associates Inc. of Nashua, N. H. He succeeds Harold W. Pope, 55, who has been named chairman and continues as chief executive officer. DOUGLAS W. CRAY

A. Stimulating Mobile-Home Loans

By ROBERT J. COLE
Veterans Administration, in an effort to stimulate more loans for homes, has increased the interest rate on such loans...

Part of a mobile-home park near Denver. The Veterans Administration has raised guarantees on mobile-home loans.

Government agency has also opened the roll of those now eligible for such guarantees to about 10 veterans who served in the forces in peacetime between World War II and the Korean War...

Mr. Sindona was required to remain within New York State, pending the outcome of the hearing. One of his principal pastimes while in this country has been lecturing at colleges and universities on international finance...

Explained by Robert C. Coon, director of the agency's Loan Guaranty Service, "The theory of the program is that the Government's guarantee substitutes for, or in lieu of, the down payment normally required."

Mr. Sindona was asked to take the witness stand and swear that a letter stating that his only assets amounted to $800,000, which he wrote to the United States Attorney was true. Judge Griesa adjourned the extradition hearing to Oct. 13.

declared insolvent in October 1974 in the largest bank failure in American history. Franklin's collapse has not been linked to the insolvency of the Banca Privata.

In an interview here last November, Mr. Sindona said he had "lost everything" in the collapse of his financial empire and had been living off funds sent to him by friends in Italy, whom he declined to name.

Referring to the $500,000 that Mr. Sindona allegedly spent in 1974 and 1975, Mr. Kenney said yesterday: "His attorney says that this sum represents the largesse of his friends. We find it difficult to believe."

Mr. Sindona was required to remain within New York State, pending the outcome of the hearing. One of his principal pastimes while in this country has been lecturing at colleges and universities on international finance...

Robert Kasanof, a lawyer representing Mr. Sindona, told Federal Judge Thomas P. Griesa yesterday that the investigation into the Franklin failure now seemed to be pointing toward Mr. Sindona, although no criminal charges have been filed against him in this case.

Last March, Judge Griesa sentenced six former executives and employees of Franklin to prison terms on charges that grew out of the bank's loss of more than $30 million in unauthorized foreign currency speculation.

Besides Mr. Kasanof, Mr. Sindona was represented in court by John J. Kirby Jr. of the law firm of Judge, Rose, Guthrie & Alexander, in which former President Richard M. Nixon and former Attorney General John N. Mitchell were partners.

Maurice Stans, a Secretary of Commerce in the Nixon Administration, testified in a Federal court trial in 1974 that he had turned down a $1 million contribution from Mr. Sindona to the Nixon re-election effort in 1972 because Mr. Sindona demanded anonymity in the gift.

Mr. Stans and Mr. Mitchell were acquitted in that trial on charges that they had accepted illegal contributions during the Nixon re-election campaign in return for promising political influence on behalf of the contributors.

Mr. Sindona, a native of Sicily, charged yesterday that the accusations of fraud against him in Italy were politically motivated. "I want to emphasize," he said in a statement, "that these charges were made in Italy on the basis of little or no investigation and on their face are false."

Officials Accused of Lying In Alaska Pipeline Inquiry

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (UPI)—Congressional investigators accused Government officials today of lying and intimidating witnesses who were questioned in a House subcommittee inquiry into construction irregularities on the Alaska oil pipeline.

The charges were made by subcommittee staff investigators who went to Alaska to look into pipeline problems at the same time as a Government study team headed by the Deputy Transportation Secretary, John W. Barnum.

The House investigators, headed by Michael R. Barrett, testified a hearing today that they were not allowed to see a copy of Mr. Barnum's report. They said a copy of a "supplemental report" which Secretary Barnum gave the Senate Interior Committee last month contained factual misstatements.

Dingell to Push Investigation
WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (AP)—Representative John Dingell, Democrat of Michigan, said today that he would press for further investigation and Congressional hearings into allegations of faulty workmanship and intimidation of inspectors on the Alaska pipeline.

Car Buyers Led July Rise Of $1.3 Billion in Loans

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (AP)—Consumer borrowing in July increased by $1.3 billion, with borrowing for car purchases leading the way, the Federal Reserve Board reported today. The board said outstanding consumer installment credit totaled nearly $168.7 billion. The increase of $1.3 billion in July was nearly equal to the $1.33 billion expansion in credit the previous month.

The Federal Reserve Board said borrowing for new automobile purchases rose by $556 million, compared with $526 million in June. Bank credit card purchases also increased sharply by $171 million, compared with an increase of $98 million the month before.

Washington, Sept. 8 (UPI)—A senior Agriculture Department official said today that the Soviet Union might "perhaps" harvest a grain crop of 207 million metric tons this year, up 12 million tons from previous American estimates and 48 percent above last year's poor crop.

The tentative forecast came from Assistant Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Bell in a speech prepared for delivery in Des Moines, Iowa, and made available here.

Mr. Bell said it would be some time before final Soviet production figures were available. But he said on the basis of recent statements by Soviet leaders, "it now appears that perhaps the Soviet Union may attain its production goal of 207 million metric tons of grain in 1976."

Chicago Board Studying Government Option Trade

CHICAGO, Sept. 8 (Reuters)—A task force of the Chicago Board Options Exchange is studying options trading in debt securities, specifically long-term issues, the exchange's vice president of research and planning, Thomas N. Rzepcki, said at a news conference today.

Mr. Rzepcki said the task force initially considered corporate debt issues, but concluded that government debt securities were better for options trading because of the depth and liquidity of the government market.

Workers in Norway Help Set Rules

Working conditions isn't always appearing at Standard Telefon. A few parts of the company, in fact, are plainly pleasant. One is a subterranean one, rather dimly lighted, that is hot and smells of oil. Two men there in any overall monitor a giant, dough-shaped machine in which coils of marine cable are impregnated with slating oil.

But even there, as throughout the plant, things are changing. The air-conditioning system installed a few years ago to cool the room proved inadequate, and a new one is going in now. Its cost is part of a budget of $1 million which management and workers have set aside for such purposes. It is obvious that over the last two or three years, as worker participation has spread through the company, the employees have come to rank a little higher and the stockholders a little lower.

No one, however, seems to want to throw out the stockholders. L.T.T. may get dividends, but it also provides funds for major investments that often preserve jobs. No one wants to throw out the profits either.

"The company's purpose is to make a good living for its employees," Mr. Thoresen said. "But a company can't exist unless it can make a product and sell it. The need to make a profit and be competitive is as strong as it has always been."

The difference now is that Mr. Thoresen and his half-dozen senior managers don't decide among themselves how to make their profits, especially in areas that affect workers. They, like everybody else here, work those questions out in a variety of committees.

United Woos Business Traveler

By WILLIAM D. SMITH

"You're the Boss," is the theme of the new $6 million United Airlines campaign to attract the business traveler.

The campaigning symbolizes a research program that has resulted in plane redesign, as well as changes in on-board food and entertainment.

"We are going after the business traveler, who represents about 50 percent of our traffic," John Zeeman, vice president of Systems marketing for United, said yesterday in announcing the campaign.

The multimedia campaign consists of television spots budgeted at $3.7 million, radio at $500,000 and newspapers at $1.6 million. There will be no national magazine advertising.

"We've matched our product to deliver on business travelers most urgent needs as revealed in our market research. And these same points will be raised graphically in our new ads in the electronic and print media," Mr. Zeeman said.

United has taken out two of its seats in first class to create carry-on additional luggage space, an important element in making business travel easier, according to the airline's research.

The airline has also decided to re-emphasize food and drink. "The thinking of some people in the industry a little while back was that travelers were not interested in the food in flight. United research indicated that quantity and quality of food and beverage was a matter of major importance to the business traveler," Mr. Zeeman noted. United has instituted a new food service particularly on its long-haul flights with foods ranging from deli brunches to full course dinners and breakfasts with bloody Marys.

The business person (one of the United spots will highlight a woman as boss) will also be treated to films on the summer Olympics and other specials created spots and news programs.

United television commercials will appear this fall on the "Today" and the "Tonight" shows on NBC, the Monday Night Football games on ABC and college football also on TV. The print ads and radio spots will run in 30 to 35 markets. The agency is Leo Burnett based in Chicago.

Mr. Zeeman said the campaign schedule was designed to come in strong for a week or two, then to pull out entirely and then re-enter the market with heavy time a few weeks later.

"It's a hard news campaign that tells the businessman and woman that we have what they want and need to make their travel more comfortable and enjoyable. We want to convince people to give us a try," the United executive commented.

Will United's creation of more luggage space on its planes lead to a "luggage war" or a battle over who has the most carry-on space? Only time and the American spirit of competition will tell.

Financial Ad Ethics Code

A code of ethics for financial advertising was issued yesterday by the Financial Advertising Committee on ethics.

The guidelines contained in the code cover those areas most susceptible to advertising abuse such as: "free" services, "free" checking, price-reduction or savings claims, packaged services, premiums and giveaways, deposit insurance, indefinite superlatives in connection with rate comparisons and communication to customers of how interest rates are computed.

The code has been approved by the 4,500-member Bank Marketing Association and the 23,000 member Credit Union National Association. The code, believed to be the first nationwide attempt to create standards in financial advertising, is an attempt to provide self-regulatory direction to the industry.

A preamble to the code states, "A financial advertisement is ethical when it is truthful and when it contains information that the intended audience can reasonably be expected to understand in making an intelligent purchase decision. It is not necessary for a financial advertisement to contain all the facts about a service because of media physical limitations, however; any features, any terms (including price), or any purchaser benefits must be presented in a manner that does not mislead either by what is stated or what is omitted."

Let us define our terms. To us, junk mail is shoddy merchandise. It distorts and dissembles. It entices and entraps the unwary. It angers and frustrates the unsuspecting. It stains client reputations. It sometimes rewards its senders with a quick buck, but it always rewards our industry with a quick kick. The DR Group, a Direct Mail and Promotion agency, is neither so new nor so young that we cannot see junk advertising in other media. But we are proud enough to care most about our own medium. We are also savvy enough (maybe brash enough) to know that true junk mail is a cop-out... the combined product of amateurism, expedience and creative bankruptcy.

Our point is simple. We are more than 50 people—writers, artists, account men, mailing service experts—who are devoted to the most exciting and responsive form of advertising. We believe that consumers welcome and respect informative, honest advertising—whether it arrives on a picture tube or in a mail box. It is the only kind that works and the only kind we do.

The DR Group is a booming, bustling business. We can give some thanks to know-how and creative excellence. But most of our thanks go to our clients. Can you imagine any of those listed below taking any junk from anyone?

Ecuador Is Threatening Takeover of Gulf Oil

QUITO, Ecuador, Sept. 8 (Reuters)—The government threatened today to confiscate the assets of the Ecuadorian subsidiary of Gulf Oil Company's assets here unless the company paid its debts to the government.

A section of the oil pipeline in the Ecuadorian Andes. The Government there is threatening to nationalize this and other Gulf Oil assets.

Government statement said an ultimatum was delivered to Ecuadorian Natural Resources Minister Vargas telling the company its assets would be expropriated without compensation if it did not pay $32 million to the Government within 30 days.

Government officials said today the company was willing to start negotiations on buying Gulf's assets, and the company paid its debts. O'Brien said the company's debt to the Government was only $13 million, that payments were being made to induce the Government to its debt to the company.

Goodwin Resignation Held Style Result

By STEVEN RATTNER The Johns-Manville Corporation, whose president resigned suddenly last Friday, issued a statement yesterday saying that its differences with W. R. Goodwin were over style rather than substance.

Table titled 'Johns-Manville At a Glance' showing financial data for three months ended June 30, 1975 and 1976, and year ended Dec. 31, 1975 and 1974.

In its original statement on Friday, the board of directors cited "irreconcilable policy differences" as the reason for the resignation. Yesterday's statement said that "the differences in policy" related to the style of management as opposed to any conflict related to operational direction of the company.

Speaking through the new president, John A. McKinney, the company also said that "the style of management eventually resulted in a personality conflict with the board which led to Mr. Goodwin's resignation."

Analysts Not Surprised Johns-Manville, the nation's 184th largest industrial corporation, is the largest producer of asbestos fiber in the Western Hemisphere and a major maker in fiber glass, piping and other building products. It has achieved its position, according to Mr. Muratore and others, not by agglomeration, but by long, steady growth.

four years ago, Mr. Goodwin led a bitter fight for the games, which ultimately failed in a Colorado referendum. This entry into the public arena, according to analysts, displeased the directors.

Analysts also criticized the lavishness and the expense of the new headquarters building, a sprawling structure built on the side of a mountain.

'A Charming Guy' Those who know Mr. Goodwin, who was not available for comment yesterday, said that he is—in the words of one analyst—"a charming, delightful, bubbly guy."

While the financial community was not surprised by the parting, it was surprised by the timing. "It seemed to me that all the negatives in the company's situation were history," said Carmine J. Maratore, first vice president of Blyth Eastman Dillon & Company, who cited Johns-Manville's growing earnings.

After several years of up and down results largely occasioned by squeezed profit margins that left earnings last year below 1971 levels, the company burst out of the doldrums in the first six months of this year and reported record profits. Earnings rose by 97 percent, to a record of $17.4 million, while sales were up by 21 percent to $469 million.

"The company's had a lot to be modest about," said another analyst. "But it's now a decent speculation on the rebound."

The 603,648 shares held by the bank represent about 14 percent of Taylor's 4,353,748 shares of stock outstanding.

Coca-Cola makes the syrup for its beverage, with about 70 percent of domestic sales made directly to some 595 bottlers who prepare and sell the drink. It also processes frozen concentrated orange juice and cans fruit-flavored drinks sold under the Minute Maid, Snow Crop, Hi-C and Real Cold labels.

The participating utility companies operate in Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Ohio, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Oklahoma and Missouri. Total costs were not disclosed, but the announcement said that the utility companies would help finance the engineering work.

7-Up to Offer Stock The Seven-Up Company plans to file a registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission today or shortly thereafter, covering a proposed secondary offering of 250,000 shares of common stock later this month.

CBS Agrees to Acquire Fawcett Publications CBS Inc. has reached an agreement in principle to acquire Fawcett Publications for an undisclosed amount of cash. While terms were not disclosed by either company yesterday, a trade source placed the proposed transaction in the range of $60 million to $80 million.

Norton Co. to Acquire Christensen in Stock Deal The Norton Company, world's largest maker of abrasive products, is planning to enter the petroleum and mining equipment field through the proposed acquisition of Christensen Inc. in an exchange of stock valued at $100.6 million, it was announced last night.

Under the agreement in principle, Norton would issue 0.56 shares of its common stock in exchange for each share of Christensen. Norton, therefore, would issue about 2.7 million new shares. Its common stock, of which about 5.4 million shares are outstanding, closed at 37 1/4 on the New York Stock Exchange yesterday. Christensen's common stock, of which about 4.8 million shares are outstanding, was bid at 14 1/4 in yesterday's over-the-counter market.

The proposed merger would constitute a tax-free pooling of interests. It is subject to a definitive agreement and approval by the boards and shareholders of both companies.

Christensen, based in Salt Lake City, Utah, manufactures diamond drilling bits for the petroleum industry and diamond coring bits for the mining industry.

Norton had a net income in 1975 of $20.9 million on sales of $548 million. It employs 18,560 people in its major manufacturing plants in Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, New Hampshire, Michigan, Alabama and Connecticut.

Initial discussions were first disclosed on July 14.

Tender Offer Is Expected On Youngstown Door The Lamson & Sessions Company announced yesterday that it had extended to Sept. 30 its tender offer to purchase all the common stock of the Youngstown Steel Door Company's 1,289,194 outstanding shares at $17 a share, totaling $21.9 million.

The company said that about 2,095,100 common shares had been tendered by the original expiration closing on Tuesday. This represents about 85 percent of the Youngstown shares outstanding.

The New York Stock Exchange said that dealings in the common stock of Youngstown Door would be suspended before the opening of trading Sept. 21 or upon the expiration of any further extension of the tender offer, provided that sufficient shares remained outstanding to warrant continued trading.

Upon suspension, application will be made to the Securities and Exchange Commission to delist the issue, the exchange added. Fewer than 200,000 Youngstown shares remain in the hands of the public, according to Lamson & Sessions.

Justice Department announced Washington that it had filed a proposed consent decree to terminate a civil antitrust price-fixing suit against Litton Business Systems Inc., a subsidiary of Litton Industries. The decree said Litton was the last remaining defendant in a suit charging companies with conspiring to fix prices in the sale of paper labels.

Electronic Data Systems Corp. of Dallas said there was no suit filed against it by the Schaefer Corporation charging with breach of contract, negligence and fraud in the design, installation and operation of Schaefer's processing systems.

Spokesman for the Dallas company said that the litigation had come as a surprise to the company. The suit, filed in New York Federal District Court, seeks $115 million in damages and punitive damages. The Electronic Data Systems spokesman said his company would make a vigorous defense and assert claims to collect amounts owed by Schaefer.

Gasification Set Allis-Chalmers Allis-Chalmers Corporation of Milwaukee said it had reached agreement in principle on a program with electric utility companies under which it would complete engineering on a proprietary coal-gasification

Mitsubishi Unit Decides To Delay Saudi Plant

The Mitsubishi Corporation of Tokyo said that its industrial group had decided on a three-year postponement of its plans to build a petrochemical complex in Saudi Arabia because of sharply higher construction costs and lower world demand for petrochemical products.

The Japanese company said it had sought approval of the decision from Petromin, the Saudi petroleum and mineral organization. Under the original agreement for the complex, made in December 1973, costs were estimated at the equivalent of $347.5 million. However, recent studies by Mitsubishi and Petromin showed an increase of costs because of inflation between $1.4 billion and $1.7 billion, or roughly five times the original estimate, the announcement added.

Rothmans Forms Unit

Rothmans International, a tobacco company, will establish a new industries division to develop projects in the nontobacco field, Sir David Nicolson, chairman, announced at the company's annual meeting in London. Noting that the company's profits were expected to show a satisfactory increase for the first half of the year, he said that the diversification moves would be pursued cautiously.

Plunge by Soybeans Weakens Corn and Wheat Prices

CHICAGO, Sept. 8 (AP)—Soybean futures fell 1 1/2 cents a bushel on the Chicago Board of Trade today and pulled corn, wheat and oats prices lower. Just as gains in soybean futures had carried the market upward the four preceding sessions, advancing 65 cents, their commodities fell sharply under soft taking and apparently selective selling. Another factor, however, played an important part in the declines. Rain as expected over important growing areas of the Middle West and many speculators sold futures for this reason. Soybeans were 20 cents a bushel higher the opening, but the gain was gradual, trimmed and after about 90 minutes prices were under previous closes and continued mostly lower. Meal futures lost more than $6 a ton, and oil was down about 90 points, nearly the permissible limit for a session. Early demand in soybeans was largely a carryover from the preceding session, but then the market appeared to follow commercial interests, which were big sellers on the opening bell. Wheat and corn futures had opened mostly lower, while oats were up 2 1/2 cents. When the soybean gain was sharply trimmed in 30 minutes, greater selling then began in the grain pits. At the close, soybeans were unchanged to 1 1/2 cents a bushel lower, with the September delivery at $7.30; wheat was 9 1/2 to 11 cents lower, September $3.19 1/2; corn 2 to 6 cents lower, September $2.98, and oats 4 1/4 to 5 cents lower, September $1.69 1/2. Potato Contract Bar Extends. A Federal judge extended yesterday a temporary restraining order barring the New York Mercantile Exchange from collecting and paying $980,000 as settlements in May's unprecedented default of 1,000 potato futures contracts. United States District Court Judge Lloyd F. MacMahon also scheduled a hearing in the matter for Sept. 14. Last week, the New York Mercantile Exchange ordered three brokerage houses that held the defaulted contracts to pay $980 a contract to the exchange. The exchange said that it then would pay the $980 a contract to persons who did not receive delivery of potatoes as promised.

Universal Atlas Sets Upstate Plant Closing

The Universal Atlas Cement Company said that it was preparing to close its Hudson, N.Y., plant because of difficult problems that have made the plant noncompetitive. Some workers will be laid off. The company is a division of the United States Steel Corporation. James E. Taylor, the company's president, said the company had been unable to overcome business problems. These were described by John Dyson, New York State Commerce Commissioner, as a combination of an over-age plant, high taxes, labor costs and a shrinking market for cement.

Beame's Rent-Decontrol Proposal Is Now Expected to Be Narrowed

By JOSEPH P. FRIED

The Beame administration, which has been studying the possibility of ending rent control on all controlled apartments in New York City...

As a result, the decontrol proposal expected shortly from the administration is likely to be limited to controlled apartments renting for $375 a month or more...

There are about 15,000 rent-controlled apartments in New York City that are priced at $300 or more a month...

The possibility of decontrolling all apartments in the city renting for $300 or more has provoked an outcry in recent months from tenant advocates...

Landlord groups, which generally want a phase-out of all rent-limiting programs, are pressing for the decontrol of all $300-and-over apartments as a first step.

A Beame administration decontrol proposal would be limited to rent-controlled apartments and would not affect any apartments under rent stabilization...

In studying the possibility of decontrolling apartments renting for $300 a month or more, administration housing officials say they have been following legal requirements rather than bending to pressure from any groups.

Under New York State and City rent control, when there is a finding that the rental vacancy rate is 5 percent or more...

The officials note that a survey last year by the Census Bureau found that while the overall rental vacancy rate in New York City was only 2.3 percent...

Based on this finding, a landlord filed a class-action application seeking decontrol of all apartments in the city renting for $300 or more.

However, the laws also give the city's Housing and Development Administration the power to define a "class" of apartments...

Yesterday, Daniel W. Joy, the Commissioner of Rent and Housing Maintenance, said that "based upon the additional refinement of the Census Bureau data, it appears that a category of $300 or more is a heterogeneous category..."

Thus, he said, while the vacancy rate was 5.7 percent for all apartments renting for $300 or more a month, it was 3.4 percent for apartments in the $300-to-$324-a-month category...

He said that the rate was 5.1 percent in the $325-to-$349 group, 7.3 percent in the $400 to $449 category...

Because of the error potential in the Census Bureau sampling survey, the over-5-percent findings in the groups between $375 and $449 could be unreliable...

G.E.-State Pact on PCB Is Praised As Guide in Other Pollution Cases

Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, Sept. 8—The Columbia University law professor who conducted hearings on state pollution charges against the General Electric Company said here today that yesterday's agreement...

The comment by Prof. Abraham T. Sofaer, after Commissioner Peter A. A. Berle of the State Department of Environmental Conservation and John F. Welch, a G.E. vice president...

G.E. uses PCB's to make capacitors—an electronic device for storing a charge—at plants employing about 1,200 workers in Hudson Falls and Fort Edward...

fessor Sofaer, whose hearings earlier this year covered 11 days of testimony, noted that G.E. had "requested and obtained" Federal and state permits to dump PCB's into the Hudson.

Until exactly a year ago, Professor Sofaer noted, when former State Environmental Commissioner Ogden R. Reid began an action against the company, "no one had ever claimed that G.E.'s PCB discharges violated state water quality standards."

That is why, Mr. Berle said, both the state and G.E. will cooperate in attempts to clean a 50-mile stretch of the Hudson, from Fort Edward to Albany...

Seven U.S. Stations to Broadcast TV Shows Directly From Mexico

By LES BROWN

Seven United States television stations in cities with large Spanish-speaking populations—including WXTV, Channel 41, in the New York area—this Sunday will begin carrying direct transmissions from Mexico's network, Televisa...

The transmissions by Western Union satellite, will include a live 45-minute newscast at 10:30 P.M., Mondays through Fridays; boxing matches from Mexico City on Saturday nights, and soccer games and a seven-hour variety program on Sundays.

Stations in Los Angeles, San Diego, San Francisco, Modesto and Fresno, Calif., and San Antonio will be carrying the Mexican network 25 hours a week, along with WXTV.

The seven are part of a 14-station association known as the Spanish International Network, which serves as both an alliance for purchasing programs from Mexico and other Spanish-speaking countries...

The programs will be transmitted by land lines to the Mexican border and then be relayed to the American stations by the Westar satellite.

Televisa will sell advertising in Mexico based on the additional exposure and will pay the stations for carrying the shows, in the manner of the domestic networks.

Two other stations affiliated with the Spanish International Network, those in Miami and Albuquerque, N.M., will also be carrying the Mexican programming, but on a delayed basis, on video tape.

Officials of WOR and the British moters have expressed satisfaction with the results and particularly with the telephone response, which has been overwhelmingly favorable.

Planners Ask Better Response for Plaza in Deals Made With Apartment Builders

By GLENN FOWLER

The City Planning Commission yesterday proposed a set of zoning rules intended to improve the quality of public plazas built alongside high-rise apartment buildings.

More than 30 such open spaces have been provided in the last 15 years by developers, who have in return received valuable bonuses as an incentive.

The new standards would mandate inclusion of seating and trees in all future plazas and would require that the open spaces be oriented southward, wherever possible, for maximum exposure to sunlight.

"We want to make these open spaces more accessible, inviting and usable," Victor Marro, chairman of the Planning Commission, said in presenting the proposed new rules at City Hall yesterday.

"We want to encourage plazas with amenities that are definite assets to their neighborhoods. They should be safe, well-lit and well-maintained. On streets where local retail activity is permitted, we think cafes and kiosks should be included to add to the ambience of the plaza."

ing will be held Sept. 22, were developed by the commission's Urban Design Group after a year-long study and with cooperation of private research groups that examined the way New York City make use of urban open spaces.

Raquel Ramati, head of the Urban Design Group, said the new standards would grant bonuses to developers, in the form of greater rentable floor area than normally permitted under the zoning law.

Other desirable amenities would include plants and grass, sculpture and wall decorations, game tables and play equipment. Plazas would have to be built with three feet of street level, and handrails and ramps would be required to make the space more accessible to handicapped persons.

At its meeting yesterday, the Planning Commission approved by a 6-to-1 vote a zoning permit for construction of a controversial shopping center on North Boulevard at 42d Street, alongside 12 Sunnyside railway yards, in Queens.

New Tool Developed To Measure Uranium

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8 (UPI)—Government scientists have developed a new nuclear device that can be used to detect and measure uranium in a drill hole, the United States Geological Survey said today.

The survey said the device, called the "Californium-252," could be a big help in the search for deeply buried uranium deposits.

It can detect as little as one one-hundredth of a percent of uranium in a bore hole.

"The Californium-252 bombards or irradiates the minerals encountered with neutrons," said Dr. Frank Smithe, who developed it along with Robert Moxham and Allan Tanner.

"When mineral specimens are thus bombarded, the mineral atoms become 'excited' and begin to emit gamma radiation signals which, in turn, can be analyzed and identified," he added.

I'm not the gal just like the gal that married dear old Dad

Those advertising executives who are keeping close pulse on that vital market of young women, 18 to 34, know they're a thrilling—and thorny—new breed. A generation of women who were taught since kindergarten not to believe everything they read. A generation of young women who were bred to a new skepticism at television's knee. A generation of young women who are warm, witty, wise, wonderful—and absolutely withering when it comes to a lot of advertising today. If you've sat in on any focus-groups with them lately you know that's true. Today even the most painstakingly truthful of ads has to contend with their blanketing skepticism—and find ways to break through that disbelief. One of the best ways, surprisingly, is one of the oldest. Put your message in the editorial environment of Good Housekeeping. Because you know this is the magazine that had the faith of the gal that married dear old Dad. But even more important, this is the magazine that has the consumer faith of today's most critical market. Today's new woman—the one who baffles dear old Dad.

a tougher customer than ever.

You never needed
Good Housekeeping more.
